A Treatise for The Kingdom of Satan

Article One

Prayer Sheets. Make prayer sheets by writing your wishes on paper (to demons, the Devil, or more personal other-worldly deities) And spruce that paper up. Do that any number of ways. Place ribbons on the side of the paper, stapling them on. Use paper that has printed out or drawn on images. You might choose designer paper. You can use pens, paint, markers, even crayons. You can put stickers onto your prayer sheets. You may also laminate that paper. Again, there are many possibilities. It doesn't end there however. There are a few more things you must do. First, where the prayer sheet is placed when it is finished. It could be rolled up into a scroll and tied with a ribbon. It could be placed in a plastic jar among others. It can be put into an envelope and so on. Second, a tithe is needed. Place a tithe into the thing you put the prayer sheet in. That could be a world coin which is a neat idea. Those got online for example, in inexpensive lots. Or it could be your loose change. As well it could be paper currency including from around the world. It does not have to be currency however. You could use a feather, you could use a green marble, rose quartz, a troll doll, whatever you wish.

Article Two

Worliness. Taking advantage of all the world has to offer. The enjoyment of the world is certainly a Luciferian thing. There is a lot out there too. You could go bowling, or watch a sport. Skating, a theatrical movie, a 3D ride, boat ride, sea fishing, shopping, just a walk, to the park, to the forest, the amusement park, a science exhibit, a sales show, the flea market, a museum, the library, the mountains, to a lake, to a pond, a jazz concert, an orchestral performance, a restaurant, the bar, a family or friend's house, you name it. Maybe you just want a break, so you travel a little out of town to stay in a motel for a few nights. Maybe it's mostly for the kids and their enjoyment.

Article Three

The art of buying. We have a few sayings we could use. "Buy it nice or buy it twice." "Let the buyer beware." "You get what you pay for." "A fool and his money will soon part." "Money blows a hole in his pocket." "Money makes the world go round." I like to visit a new place whenever I can. I prefer not to go to the same place over and over again. You might find some places that surprise you content-wise. I call it treasure hunting. Whatever good thing you find, you'll know it when you see it. Trust your heart. Even if you can come up with no reason to buy it, buy it because it tugs at your heart. Should you have a strict budget, or not? I would say sometimes, sometimes not. Sometimes you should just see what catches your fancy at the moment. Other times you might want to carefully go over what you need. However you can always add a certain amount to your "anything" fund.

It's good to have two backups along when the one you are currently using. Then when you are down to two, buy another. If your place looks like you are hoarding, then put your things into storage tubs and stack them nicely. You should always pay for the things you need, of course. We might not like it, but food costs a certain amount and must be paid for in full. As for buying food, determine a good amount for a meal, then determine how many meals a day, then add the money needed for snacks. That will give you an effortless budget. You won't even need a calculator. As far as that goes, some food you buy has more than one meal in a package. Just determine how much that costs per meal rather than altogether.

Sometimes when you pay just a little more for something you get something much better. In the long run buying higher quality things saves you money. They last longer. However sometimes it doesn't make sense to pay more for a thing. Like a sponge, or aspirin. Aspirin is aspirin. The top brand isn't better. Name brand peanut butter isn't better unless you get the cheapest there is.

Don't be fooled by commercials. Those commercials cost money and that raises prices. Also, ask yourself what laughter has to do with the product. For example a commercial basically "laughs you into" buying something. But what does laughter have to do with buying car insurance?

Article Four

Why capitalism is a good system. The main argument against it is that it's only for rich people. That's not true. It involves an open and free market. The sellers have to provide things at competitive prices and competitive quality. They have to give the people what they want.

Article Five

People blocking paradise. Some people do not want a paradise. They do not want anyone to live well. That's because they hate themselves. They want to ravage the world. They want to sabotage happiness.

Article Six

Relationships. I am not for them. I was when I was younger. I have grown into a person who loves solitary life. I don't want to have to share my time with someone else. I want my time to be exclusively my own. That goes for my money as well. I don't want a wife, for the same reason, and kids, for even more of the same reason.

Article Seven

Some of my favorite things (they are neat things.) I would just list them because they don't get enough attention. To say them randomly: Cherry cider. Cherry cider will always be my favorite drink, though it is a hard thing to locate. I like to collect board game pieces. I don't even care if the box is complete because it isn't about the entirety of it. Pokemon cards. I can't leave a store without buying at least a few packs. Comics remain a fun collection of mine. I just go into the comic store blind and see what is most visually pleasing. The store I go to even has indie (local) comic book makers. Video games. If I could have a small collection of them: Ninja Gaiden 2 (NES), Gremlins 2 (NES), Wanderers from Y's (SNES), Final Fantasy 4, 6, and 8. 8 Eyes (NES), The Legend of Zelda: Link's Awakening (Gameboy.) However I could go for any old video game. The problem here is that there are no retro gaming stores. Buying them online isn't so fun.

Some things I like for no real reason: Green marbles, quartz of all kinds but especially rose quartz. Other semi-precious stones such as opal along with a nice silver chain. I like highly valuable rings. I mean who wouldn't. I prefer Sketchers shoes. I love the slip in brand. Black cargo pants, or sometimes gray ones. Retro gaming clothing. You know, it has Mario on it, says Final Fantasy. I have three "Nintendo San Francisco" caps. Two red, one gray. I like Steeler's NFL clothing. They are my favorite team but I love the look. I also like fanny packs. They are so convenient. I like Tarot cards. Naturally I love the Rider Waite deck however I have fun buying various decks among the many that exist. With books I just have to say I like the Heechee Saga by Frederik Pohl.

EL panels and wire. More commonly known as Indiglo. They are like electronic glow in the dark lights. I like Brut deodorant. I like Timex Ironman watches, the digital with date watches. They are a step above their Expedition brand. I used to like sandals but they tear apart too easily and at a random time. But as house shoes they are nice. Baklava is a great desert. A Reuban sandwich is great when from a restaurant. Those are quite difficult to make right at home. My favorite tea is called Oolong. That is tea which has fermented a little. It has a woodsy taste to it. Oolong or not I cannot live without black iced tea. With coffee or tea I drink them strong and sugarless.

I like stickers. I like stamps even more. Address stamps for snail mail. I have a fairy, dragon, mushrooms, a second fairy one, just my name, and one of crystal stones.

Article Eight

Unique additions to your home. A man's home is his castle. But a Luciferian's home is their palace. So many homes are so dull and unlively. As adults we have determined that the bed goes here, and the TV goes here, with little to add to that. You might find some bland portraits hanging which you've seen many many times. Walls are usually white. Not even curtains have any flair. But you have the opportunity to spruce things up. Some of them don't even really have a reason for existing beyond the fact that they are neater that way. Such as having your bed go further up. We can use glow in the dark paint. We can use quality beads for a doorway. We may even install stained glass windows.

Make the tile as special as you can get it. Go ahead and cover your bedroom walls with stickers until they can be no more stickered. I once knew a guy who had a mister. I think they are called that. They are tiny holes in a hose that bring down mist in the front yard. As for the yard you can have a large swing. You might exchange metal doorknobs for those more clear and crystal like. Shower your walls with various things you've collected, especially if they came with hang tabs. Be more unique in that approach however, leaning away from action figures, comics, or video games. Everyone is already doing that.

I would prefer a rainbow of colors on a wall. Not just one. You might even use it as your canvas. You can have a bar-like thing in your garage complete with mixed drink items. Have fun on the roof. Make it a wonderful star gazing experience. You might even have a tent up there.

Article Nine

A list of nice things to own. Just as food for thought: Christmas tree lights and it isn't even Christmas. Halloween pumpkin buckets to store your things in. Halloween pencils and other things, as they are neat collectables. A choice gaming system to collect for, whether obscure or well known. Buying glow sticks more often, as they are simply neat. Taking up painting all of a sudden. Maybe getting that painting in has been egging you for awhile. Old electronics. Buying a cassette player or something else left behind. A thermostat if you need one. It is nice to know the temperature specifically. Colorful pens. Trading cards you can mail along with snail mail. No additional postage needed. Trading cards of the past. They used to be made for anything and everything. Just a soda at the corner store. Any investment at all in your future. Bullion, value raising things (usually things already valuable over what is simply predicted to become so.) Fun things like silly straws. How about a popsicle maker. A gambling scratcher now and then without over doing it. Starting a new kind of clothing to wear like going from carpenter pants to cargo pants. Some nice cologne. Spending a little more on a better brand of deodorant. Spending more on things you use most often. A better coffee maker. A better microwave. A dry erase board. A fiber optic lamp. A musical instrument. A harmonica: no batteries, versatile, fits in your pocket. A white noise machine can block out all kinds of outside noise. A remote control fan. A lily flower shaped metal lamp (any lamp that looks special to you.) Black light and black light posters. Just some posters. Some miniatures. Of wise old men, frogs, goats, or whatever animal you like the most. Trying something you've never tried before. Buying a different candy bar every day or once a week until you've had them all. Incense. Various decks of tarot cards. Long forgotten books. LCD games. Mechanical games. Wall image projector (such as stars and things on your nighttime ceiling.)

We find it difficult to have fun outside of our homes without money. We can exercise. We can walk around. What kind of entertainment is that? The person who said money cannot buy happiness was sorely wrong. Of course it does. Retail therapy is great.

Article Ten

The Luciferian desires more childish things. Children have a great and vibrant taste. One that we grow out of all too quickly. The streets of Heaven are paved with gold. The streets of Satan are littered with candy, toys, stickers, board game pieces, mood rings, cheap rings, neat things, and fun things. Just like the commoner's home, the city looks quite dull. A place for trashcans mostly and ordinary buildings. At best a little pond or something. Surely Walt Disney would know what I am talking about. Halloween comes and all of a sudden we are having fun again.

Fog makers, bubble makers, mist makers, and the like, can make things more surreal. Let the shape of builders be just a little more outrageous. Focus more on swimming holes and tall swings than ordinary tree-containing (and nothing else) parks. The chairs in restaurants can stand being a little more spacious and comfortable. Drinking cups at fast food places can have more flair. The projection of images on buildings can pleasantly light up the night. Have more take-from and give-to stands. More vending machines, like Japan is doing. Have more black lights around, strobe lights in mysterious places, and make the world a more mysterious place to be.

Article Eleven

Be safe. There are evil people roaming about more than ever. We can never be too safe. These people would wantonly harm and destroy you. Avoid unpopulated areas. Avoid going out too late at night. Be careful of what you say. It is better to say nothing at all but rather go about quietly. Some are just looking for an excuse to harm you. If you talk back to them you never know if they have a knife or friends with them. Be polite even when you feel like there's no real reason to. Some people will lash out at you over simple things such as not saying "excuse me." Of course you should avoid the bad neighborhoods altogether. Try to get out of any bad neighborhood. Lock your stuff up tight especially if you reside in a wealthy home. Invest in a panic room and security items. There are mad people about. They have no rhyme or reason for what they do, but they enjoy it.

Article Twelve

Greater freedom. We can all use a little more freedom. So many restrictions and regulations have piled one upon the other. Rules keep tightening more and more. Things of modern morality have constricted us too. Say one wrong thing and it's the end for you. If not jail, then being ostracized. So what if a person wants to smoke tobacco? I'm not even speaking as a smoker myself. I see though that they have been riddled to death with warnings. Yet they continue their habit. If it is only harming them, then give them the right. It is a hard thing to say but everything is death in this world. Certain ridiculous laws shouldn't exist. They even stifle progress. They make progress more difficult. Not only that, they are frustrating to people. Maybe that is in part why people are so damn crazy these days. People have ideologies forced in them. Normal and natural socializing isn't possible with it. So I say for the freedom of your mind, avoid them as much as possible. Remove all of that junk that has been forced into your brain. You'll feel a million times better.

We must accept that accidents will happen. Nothing is a hundred percent safe.

At the same time there are people who harm our rights by abusing them. They will pull out everything in the book to avoid punishment. They screwed up. They can't just accept that. Their doings were even on camera. Still they try to appear like the victim in the whole matter. They cannot be touched because they are touched. Touched with a mental illness, skin condition, or faith based thing. So when something bad happens to a genuinely mentally ill person, whose to know? How are the police to know if they are faking it or not. Then there's the tale of the boy who cried wolf. It's no wonder why police appreciate a person's honesty. Most people would just lie through their teeth.

Article Thirteen

Luciferians should never be riddled with guilt and remorse. Those are Christian traits. With whatever a Christian has to say about being forgiven, they don't feel that way. They have been made to fear hell fire, unfortunately. We just have to come to the conclusion that guilt and remorse serves no purpose. That is if we have learned better, the two do not have to exist alongside. These things can even cause self hate. We are all in a screwed up world.

Likewise we shouldn't harbor worry. For most people the only two options of dismissing that from your life is either through logic or through a choice. The more powerful one of the two is to just choose not to worry. No reason needed. Just the reason that you don't like how it feels. A strong person can do that. An even stronger person can choose to be without anger and hate. It isn't a thing they wash out with logic. They don't do mental gymnastics to purge the bad feelings. They just decide to not feel bad.

Article Fourteen

Outsideness. There was a time when our homes didn't really have anything great inside of them. It's no wonder why people would be outside more often. To this day though people tell you you have to get outside. Be burnt up by the sun a little. Visit the trees or whatever. What difference does it make? TV came around and then tape playing devices and records, CDs, video games, and much more. Night time in our rooms is lit up like daylight. Further in the past they were more dim and light wasn't as easily managed. We have temperature control in our homes. It could be hot as hell outside but cool inside. Some of us have pools. Some of us have pool tables or darts. Some of us have large televisions, and not too few a home theater. It is also safer inside. You never know what kind of maniac is wandering around. We can have our friends and family around inside and only them. The insides of our homes can be nicely decorated on holidays. We choose the aesthetic of our homes, not other people as it is on the outside. To put it simply: we are no longer living in huts.

Article Fifteen

A trouble-builder. The only thing worse than a trouble maker is a trouble builder. A trouble builder creates "problems" to solve. They bring others into the cause. While the problem was just an imaginary thing all along. They thrive off of the problem. It is their bread and butter. They aren't always paid with money but they are paid with people's feelings. Propaganda is an art form for them. They twist the truth around. They make things look more dire than they are. Anyone can create intention. They make it seem as if the person is plotting the worst of things. They make it seem like accidents were not accidental. If a lie about them comes around they assume it was true with or without proof. They'll exaggerate a problem about a thing. They'll speak of evils. About caffeine for example. Whatever they can get away with, whatever is believable. They'll work to make it believable. They will in fact fool themselves into believing the same. After all, they couldn't bear to think themselves a fraud. They have to believe in their cause. That's the whole point, the cause.

Some people create well defined enemies from people, things, and ideas. It gives them something to feel strong over. Even if it lacks any real substance or actuality.

Article Sixteen

Where are the inventive minded? Where are the inventive, idealists, and discoverers? Those things are modernly relegated to scientific teams and companies. There was a time (long ago) when individuals were always inventing and discovering. Now inventions are nothing special. Such as a new kind of dish cleaning sponge or something. However within these companies making things it is sometimes just one among them that landed on it. People are no longer coming up with these great ideas within their home while alone. Inventing something can be very lucrative. Among the ways of getting rich it is among the more feasible.

Article Seventeen

Am not Mr. Evil. I'm not here to talk about devils. I'm not here to offer them praise. I am certainly not here to rant against God. I like the guy. No, what I am here for is to just express truly Luciferian ideas. As a matter of fact I am a philanthropist. I believe in doing good. I wish for the wellness of others. I would only wish bad against those who harm innocent people. That itself is good and right. I had my time as an evil Satanist while I was a teenager. I could have gotten into the worst of trouble for that. Fortunately

I snapped out of that Slayer-induced state of mind. I have grown. I have matured. I have no reason to wish ill on anyone. I don't even like the thought or idea of hate. I was raised to not even use the word. I don't even like heavy metal. You want to know what my favorite music is? It's 90s pop. I just don't like harsh music nor sad music. I just like happy bubbly music. I am not much into any sort of Satanic ritual. I don't need that in my life. I have better things to do with my time.

Article Eighteen

Visualization, taste magic, and The List of the Principality. Here is the list of the Principality:

Person One:
Red, Hand, Bird, Staff.

Person Two:
Brown, Bear, Bee, Cane.

Person Three:
Green, Rabbit, Seed, Stage.

Person Four:
Goat, White, Ring, Thief.

Person Five:
Red, Whip, Cat, Fairy.

Person Six:
Yellow, Rodent, Lord, Wind.

Person Seven:
Black, Blast/Wand, Fox, Beast.

Person Eight:
Horse, Dust, Toad, Yellow.

Person Nine:
Assassin, Creature, Word/Scroll, Tiger/Lion.

Person Ten:
Blue, Elephant, Stone, Spirit.

Person Eleven:
Dragon, Purple, Dog/Wolf, Mask.

What is all of that? That is the list of the principality. It is the nature of Those Who Rule. It is how to know them, find them, and identify them. You too are in the list. Your most loved are too. The oldest is the first, the last the youngest. So among eleven you fit in yourself. For example if the only two older than you are your parents, you are the third. It is your choice who to include. You do not have to occupy all eleven. They are known in movies, shows, music, art, video games, books, you name it.

Visualization and taste magic: Taste magic is combining visualization to food. Give each person a flavor. The Principality list will show you how. For example, the second person, having "brown," can be brown sugar. Can be white sugar as it also has "cane." By the way "cane" can mean a walking cane or sugar cane. In fact the list has things that can be more than one thing. Whip can be the weapon or whip cream. So then these are incorporated into your thoughts as you eat and think of them. Consider it a "Satanic Communion."

Article Nineteen

In a Satanic Time. Satanism comes about fast. Just give it a few decades. People love it, as it just grows and grows although they don't always know what they see to be Satanic. So many atheists don't know better. They've had a shroud put over their eyes. I would say it seriously started to develop in the 80s. Look at all of the Luciferian things going on at the time. The topic here though is that the world has not yet matured, nor have the Luciferian kinds of things they are making.

At first it is very child-like, like fart jokes. Like dirty senseless violence all over the place. A new thing, a new toy. The people and the things they make are not yet matured. People themselves living as Luciferians are not yet matured either and the effects can be devastating. How would they live with new found sin? The freedom of it misdirects them all kinds. They've yet to control and master their minds. They've yet to come up with a good philosophy (as the one I present here.)

Article Twenty

Your new name. That's a very Luciferian thing: coming up with a new name. You can come up with as many as you want, too. The first known birthdays were for the Pharaoh of ancient Egypt. They were not for their original birth but for their birth into godhood. Along with it came a new name. In fact they'd even change their name for special occasions. One method is to create a new name like you would a new word. First think of what you would embody and then turn that into a word, or three, with many combinations possible. Ray of light can be Liraya, for example. Please be creative. We have too many Satanas and Damiens. I chose to put a spin on Damien with Damuel. Like Samuel, with a D. I learned later that Samuel is a word that means "God." My names have been my birth name, Lucifer Jeremy White, Lucifer Damuel White, and now Lucifer Diamon White. As in Diamond. I chose "white" because black was just too cliche. That and I like gray sided things. You know, like "Marilyn Manson." That's a two sided name too. Maybe it's more fun if a friend gives you your new name such as within a coven or some such thing.

Article Twenty-One

Personality snatching. Or you could say taking on different characters. That's being like an actor taking on different parts, but what I am talking about here is doing so outside of a movie. This is a fun thing to do even if for adults it is silly. Children spend their whole childhood doing it. To be a detective, a news reporter, some kind of hero or villain. Whatever you would like to be, pretend to be. Get that feeling and perspective that you can not otherwise have. As teenagers it had started to develop further. I embodied a few things. I was a vampire. I was a warlock. It really added substance and meaning to my personality. Then a hole was left. I became an adult. I could no longer pretend.

Article Twenty-Two

Outside of the comfort zone. Stepping outside of your comfort zone can be a powerful thing. For example going out at night when you never do or not cleaning for a couple of days when you're otherwise compulsive towards it. Listening to music you'd never heard otherwise as it isn't a typical place you'd find it. People restrict themselves instead of branching out. The more you find to like the more you have to like, and the more you enjoy. It's very true that the first step is always the most difficult one. Some mornings I think for a moment "I'll do nothing at all." I don't want to do anything but watch TV. But I always find the motivation to start and the rest quickly comes together. I am even enjoying myself right now. I have fallen into a few different hobbies with nothing having been added in some time. We don't need more than a few. Having three or four is ideal, I'd say. We want to be able to change things up sometimes. Habits as such naturally change one to the other and back again. I choose to work for the first four hours of the day and then do whatever.

Of course the whole topic goes beyond habits and routines. We should try new things. We should take chances on things. We might even find something nice to carry with us in this life. Let us break the rules from time to time if it does no harm. One thing is certain, we should never settle into a mediocre life. We've got to be getting things done. If you find yourself unable to create, then maybe you have just not found something you'd enjoy.

Article Twenty-Three

Means to success. I always say: if you want a good job then you need a good college degree. That pretty much is the surest way to succeed. You can be prolific. Write book after book, make game after game, song after song, whatever you choose. By making many of them, if even one succeeds, the rest will fall into place. I have written nearly 100 books that I placed in the public domain because fame is more important to me than money. I am now creating copyrighted books including this one. The effect is that I will always have a large body of work freely shared but if you want the rest, pay me.

You can succeed via inventing things. That just takes a sharp mind and competition to it is at an all time low. A new phenomenon in the area of work is that of reselling things. People make all kinds of money that way. They gather things up from Goodwill or garage sales and then sell them at higher prices. You can add 3D printers to that. With them making things people would love to buy at only the price of time and plastic. Maybe you just want an easy job. You know what the easiest job is? Being a receptionist. They have the work of pressing a button to let another in. Well, sometimes they also have to put the mail into the tenant's boxes.

We all want a meaningful life. We all want to be a star, one shining the brightest. Most of us just get by doing the work we do. We can do things part time however. At least we then know we have a shot. You have to be self motivated.

Article Twenty-Four

Strength. Strength makes you happy and keeps you composed. The weak are the most miserable creatures on the planet. They are often responsible for death and destruction. Strength is an excellent trait. Without it terrible things come into your life. Without it many bad things happen to your life. With it, the problem is too afraid of you, in a manner of speaking. Insults just don't carry as much weight when you are strong. Your self confidence remains intact. Your self esteem along with it. You can hold a job. You can support your family the right way, with your bare hands. That instead of accepting sorts of help you shouldn't need. Unfortunately the strong have to bare the weak on their shoulders. That should not be. For that sake, live and let die. If it is in a person's fate to remain homeless, then sure that's bad, but having to support them is also bad.

Don't mistake an a-hole with strength. They are in fact weak people. The "bark and no bite," "carry a big stick so you can trash talk" kind. If you are riddled with problems then no, you are not strong. Being strong is not being angry and bossy. That is personal weakness projected onto others.

A strong person goes about life happy and sure, not wishing ill on others. They don't hate the world they occupy. They take enjoyment from it, not misery. Being emotionally strong means you have patience and calm. While some would rant and rage over petty things, the strong person is about that. So let's not make weaklings out of people. Let's wisely give them strength. Which is to say, build them up, without breaking them.

Article Twenty-Five

Beating the world. A bad world can change you into the worst of things. When I hear gangster talk (uses a lot of the word bitch, other cussing, and mispronounced things to sound "smoother.") I see right through it. I see a petty person trying to be cool. I see a disingenuous person trying so hard to be cool. The person doesn't just talk. They know they must talk in a certain way to be liked. Better people just talk normally.

Groups can endanger a person. One fool in the bunch can get the rest into trouble. It's better to have one good friend than many lesser friends. You might notice that the group starts saying bad things about your one friend. Those are the group minded. They are jealous of the exclusivity.

Do not do as your peers do. Do as you think is the wiser choice. Don't get caught up in drugs. I myself have never taken them and there were at least a few times people attempted to make me take them. I didn't though. These group people who call themselves gangs are really just a loose collective of losers. They have lost in life. Those among their own are terrible to be around. Always fighting. Violence among their own.

Always running from the law. What a miserable life. But people make good quick money from it. The mentality was fostered by morons.

Don't be consumed by the television. Many have lost a chunk of reason for being because of TV. They could instead be productive or creative. They could use their minds in far broader ways. They could breathe the air and find freedom without it. TV makes you believe a certain way. It fosters mentalities in you that you would never have without it. Those aren't good ones either.

Article Twenty-Six

Disconnection from commonality. Without uniqueness your spirit cannot expand outward and is instead restricted. Don't let the world write the story or put the makeup on for you. To be your genuine self you must be an individualist and that means dispelling commonality. Your tastes must be beyond what's popular. You must make it its own natural thing. So in the library don't go straight to the popular section. Avoid popular selections. Trust your heart with what you want to buy. That is the true basis of what you like. Other things may have been put in your heart. Forget those things and reach for what's really your's.

Be more selective. As for your beliefs, pick and choose what you believe. Keep an open mind at the same time. Don't be left, don't be right, just be yourself and think for yourself.

Article Twenty-Seven

Let's examine your enemies. What future does a person have if they are in rage wherever they go? I don't even mean something as bad as rage but just has a terrible attitude all of the time. Your enemy has no future. They tried to anger you. Of course, "misery loves company" but you were too mature for them. Be assured they will anger the wrong person. If not that then they'd eventually do something that lands them in jail. And I hope they learn from it. Why be offended by a miserable person anyway?

Be a success in life. Put yourself above them. You'd be looking down on them. They'd be looking up on you. Defy their wishes for you to feel bad. Don't give them anything good. People think that "cools them down" but it just comes across as weak and strange. Just know that these people are insecure. Some of them even hate life. As such, you are above them already. They are both a zombie and a vampire at the same time.

Article Twenty-Eight

Go ahead and be selfish. Don't let anyone call you selfish. They are just trying to break you down. They are just wanting to mold you like clay. Why be less yourself and pretend that you don't matter more than others. Everyone should have themselves matter more than others. We have a life to live and an objective to find happiness in it. We are here for ourselves. We aren't here to serve others and hopefully are not forced to. I mean we have jobs to serve ourselves, with money. Don't share things. I've seen it all too often. People loading money off on others and having nothing for themselves. Why should you have to share things that were gotten for you by you? Why can you get by but they cannot? Does that mean they are your burden?

Let yourself be a winner without your prize being taken. Let those who have lost against you find another venue to win at. Be the best person you can be without guilt of superiority. Find one thing to master and master it well. I would even say I have tons of pride. Think good things about yourself until your ego is drunk on itself. It is possible to reach that state. I know. Incidentally, that sounds like the Luciferian equivalent to the Buddhist's "nirvana."

However, sometimes gift giving is selfish in its own way. We are proud of what we got for someone. It just brings some of us good feelings. Sometimes it is more about the team and less about us individually. Sometimes our pride comes from others. Sometimes we should give back. There are circumstances where we shouldn't be selfish.

Diversity without diversity is not diversity. People only use the words to mean things like a person's race, gender, or sexuality. Why not take on Greater Diversity? That would mean owning a restaurant that is half asian and half american diner. Who does that though? Take on two forms of painting. Half abstract and half impressionism or at least being an artist who does one then the other. There are all sorts of ways to add diversity to what you do. There are all kinds of ways of making a thing more than just one thing. Serve more than one kind of person that way. Like Cartoon Network and Adult Swim. Cartoon Network shows kids cartoons. Adult Swim shows adult cartoons. Adult Swim starts when it gets dark. They are both on the same channel.

Instead of the restrictive concept that we should gather those of race and gender maybe consider a broader look. Let's bring in people of many different types. Let's encourage different types and give each of them pride. Let's have a day for each, such as Goth Day. We have a Mario day. March 10th, Mar10. We have a Star Wars day "May the 4th be with you." Let's teach others about the types. Let's talk about them more than we talk about the mundane subject of race, sexuality, and gender.

All humans are a touch sicko. Just look at some of our entertainment. Like horror movies. Horror movies do the best. They get the most sequels. Some of them have gotten 10 or more movies. Some just love violent forms of music. Controversy sells. The depraved sales. It doesn't mean that we ourselves are bad. Some of us are but certainly not most. Most people can avoid being inspired by these things to do harm. However it doesn't help either. Feel guilty? Don't. It is just a part of human nature. Even if a small number of us are relatively saints, don't feel bad.

Just how fast things can change. What a difference a day can make. I can think of a good recent example. One day I was watching the news when they said that a mysterious illness was on a cruise ship. That ship was quarantined. Turns out it was the Corona virus. San Francisco was proud to be the first to isolate people from each other and mandate masks. The rest of the nation soon followed. Before long the streets and businesses were mostly vacant. Far more than what's normal. Stickers on the ground indicated how far you should be from another. Every place had hand sanitizer. Washing your hands became compulsory. You could not go anywhere without a mask. You could risk being locked up for it. Even churches were shut down. This all unraveled quickly. You never know what virus might surface. Oddly, just as soon as the phenomenon began it ended. It ended quickly after vaccines came out.

A sudden war can erupt. Oh, and volcanos too. Like the massive one at Yosemite Park. But war… people need war it seems. With all this talk against it it is always inevitable. Boot camps will change a person's life. I know. One minute on a bus, the next a drill sergeant is shouting commands at you. It is far more intense than you might expect. You do what they say when they say it.

Some dude just won the lottery. I bet that changed their life. One day you find you have cancer, which is a truly terrible prospect. One night I was puking and had this enormous pain at my side. I thought it was constipation or something but the feeling got so bad I had to get to the hospital. A CT scan showed my appendix burst. I had two surgeries. One to remove it and another to drain out abscess. I was in that hospital bed for 12 days. Just nothing of a life I was so happily engaged with. Let's not be negative any further.

A good thing can happen to you in an all of a sudden way. Becoming famous or rich for whatever reason. Whether from your music, paintings, or writings, who knows? Just set up the possibility and if nothing else at least you tried.

Article Thirty-Two

Working for your future. Don't just sit around! There are things to do. Things that can give you a better life. The route you take is up to you. What kind of famous person do you wish to be? Where should the money pour in? Just be cautious. Some methods are easier than others. Some are practically pipe dreams one and all. Some are quite elusive to achieve. You might learn acting. Painting maybe. Writing, making music, programming, business creation, religion making, church building, whatever you like the most.

Be prolific. Get your voice out there. Advertise. Master yourself and your thing. Be something that stands out. Make things that stand out. Give them at a nice price just as any good capitalist would do.

You could start school. Whether a trade school, college, or big university. Just don't expect some degrees to take you far. That's just the way it is. At the same time don't go too far over your head. Do something you are capable of. Do something that you are naturally good at. Some of us are natural mathematicians. Others, psychology. Given those things it is perhaps the easiest route to set good things up for you and your life.

As I sometimes say, you can be an inventor. What is needed there is the right mentality.

Some things give you money and other things give you fame. Usually with fame comes money. Of course some things can give you both. You are also a success when you are doing what you want to do, however, and it pays the bills. Such as wanting to travel the seas in a ship. It may not pay much, but it is real fun. You might enjoy buying things to resell them. You may enjoy teaching children. You might just be proud of the things you create. If it gives you happiness then it gives you success. At the same time you can work on more lucrative things part time.

Article Thirty-Three

Creating your personality. If you are a teenager or young adult then you probably greatly enjoy creating one. I do remember when I thought I could make others think I was a vampire or evil warlock. I took a lot of inspiration from books, movies, music, and shows. I molded myself in a certain way. Maybe the saying applies "you cannot teach an old dog new tricks." Sometimes though I would just make up fake accents to anyone none the wiser. My clothing was my personality. I dressed a lot goth. Up until my late 30s I would even go about in a trench coat not thinking that it must have looked odd. I became more subtle. You lose that when you get older. That is, personality development.

Many pleasures small and large. Find a lot of "mini" pleasures. That includes drinks (tea, soda, coffee), snacks, choice music, all kinds of entertainment, the best book you can find, occult things perhaps, going about in new clothes, buying a little here and there going all over town, buying $5 things from china until you've spent $200, adding things to your room, reflecting on the things you have bought, finding happiness in those, being creative, painting, composing music, making a nice online video, to provide some good examples. You might even create a list of these things. You can expand on what I wrote above.

Have a comfortable seat. Have a nice drink. Sit down. Enjoy life. Never run out of things to do. Make your options many. Pursue anything at all which makes you happy.

Article Thirty-Five

A place for you and a place for me. That's what a Lucferian wants most of all as far as society is concerned. That's not only giving to us but to many. That benefits all. We are not all the same. We can never be as one. We are all different. So when a person wants to be around their own kind then there should be a place for that, for whatever the reason. Race, religion, sexuality, gender, retro gaming guys, goths, punks, drug users, greater freedom, anarchy places, and highly moral places at the same time. Set aside a chuck of land for the homeless and the civilians will not have to deal with them. The prisons will empty if people are allowed to do drugs… in their own territory and not besides. People could pursue their religious cause. Hard bodied and spirited people can be among their own.

Again, we are not all the same and people should have places to be among their own, while not harming anyone of a different state.

Article Thirty-Six

No self shame or self hate. If a Luciferian is anything in regards to psychology it is just that. Without that the rest just collapses. Emotional wellness requires self love. Enjoying life requires living without shame or self hate. They used to say “stop feeling sorry for yourself.” Someone might ask themselves if they are doing just that. Are they just having a spell of self pity? Sometimes that sort of thing comes into my mind, but I recognize it then stop it. People have too high moral standards sometimes. Morality is great when it is guiding you into fitting you into society. Sometimes a person’s conscience is at fault. They have harmful "standards." They were taught these things. They have empathy in the wrong way. They perceive pain in others that doesn’t even exist. They cannot let go of the past. Things could be long gone but there they remain with it as if that day was today. Self hate creeps up out of nowhere to add a little pain to your day. I say reject these thoughts and be happier.

At the base of Luciferianism there should be no self shame or self hate. If a Satanist does not have self love, if one is not right with themselves, then they are disconnected with Luciferianism. That is just the way it is.

Article Thirty-Seven

Simple solutions. Sometimes solutions are simple. Sometimes we just need to end anti solutions (things that allow bad things to exist.) For example the true story of a city which turned theft below $900 a misdemeanor. That would be here, in San Francisco. If you are reading this book in the far future, that's the price of two nice televisions. So if you are going to steal a candy bar you might as well steal 400 more along with it. Hey, it’s just a month in jail if you get caught. People in fact go into stores with a big black trash bag, load up, and leave.

More to the point: a simple solution might be tougher laws. People going around all crazy doing stupid things, being allowed to, all because of lax laws. People need to fear the law. First, they need to fear their parents. Then when older, the law. There must be that connection.

I believe that sincerely mentally ill people should be hospitalized. They should be compelled to take medication. When I say they I should instead say we. I am Schizophrenic. I was homeless and unmedicated for a year in 2014. While it was spiritually remarkable and book fuel, much of it was sheer insanity. I thought at that point the lies were true. I thought psych doctors were out to poison me. So I avoided help. It took a trip to jail and then a psych ward to get my life back together. I would love to have skipped the jail part. That so often happens to my kind. We should be compelled to take our medication.

Science can give us all kinds of simple solutions. The kind that comes in a pill. If weight loss is just not practical via diet and exercise there's always medication for it. Lower your cholesterol with it. Hopefully more and more solutions emerge from that sort of thing. Most of our simple solutions will come from science. Not that discovering them is so easy but once they are, many problems will just be a thing of the past. Like rapid home development via technology. Fusion energy which will supply our electricity like never before, to say the least. Our best solutions come from science and technology. They should be funded more than anything else, I'd say.

Magical fun. If magic has no other purpose than being fun, that's good enough. You might even believe in it sometimes. Tarot cards are a lot of fun. They let you think outside of the box if nothing else. There are many decks to collect. In fact that sounds like a fun thing to collect. I even had a vampire deck at one time. Dungeons and Dragons is a lot of fun. I think I could include that in the topic as well as RPGs. RPGs get you closer to casting spells than you'd get otherwise. Meditating into a crystal ball, at least you are meditating. Chanting can keep your mind focused.

There are all sorts of stones to collect. A magician would even tell you that a crystal is more valuable than gold. Lots and lots of neat rocks to own for various reasons. Then there is herbalism. This plant does one thing, that one another. There are symbols to learn and use. In short, it can all be a lot of fun and that's a good enough reason in and of itself.

Article Thirty-Nine

Anarchy. Some people would love to tear down society. They don't want law and order. They want to break it in every way. They might not know what they are getting into but there comes a point when it is too late. That's the time when they cannot sleep safely at night. Where some lawless fun became grave danger unto themselves. People who were once held back are now right upon them, to freely harm them. If we have no other reason than to protect our loved ones, anarchy should not exist. I believe that is a major component to non-anarchy. We want our loved ones safe.

Some want anarchy because they perceive the police as evil people. I would say that's the lesser of two evils. Anarchy is far worse than bad policing. People would wantonly break into stores to loot. They say "it's not like they don't have insurance." They feel they deserve the things of that place. It doesn't click with them. They are too selfish for it to. They don't see another person's things as belonging to them. If it doesn't belong to the looter, then it has no meaning. Therefore it should be their own. They don't place value on another person's things, to put it another way.

They want to play the role of gangster, mobster, or villain. They have to break the law to truly fit the part. They have to get away with it if they are going to be a good one. Maybe though jail is just a badge of honor. Hey everyone, I was in jail. They take it like they had just joined the military or something.

Doing the right thing. You've got to tip a person and tip them at least fair. Just think: the person just went out of his or her way just to deliver your groceries. What value do you place on that? What is the value of not having to take it home yourself? Think of it this way: what would you pay your friend to do that work for you?

One time I had this exterminator which just wasn't quite working out right for me. I had to call the guy back over again and again. Then, while he was spraying a spot right above me, he hit my eye with his "poison." Only I felt no irritation of any kind. It just goes to show you, you never know how a person might discover your wrong doing. As that guy was discovered then and there. One little clue of some kind might divulge a person's wrong doings. You know, like the old, "but didn't you say this?" So how is that possible?

Don't rip people off. You know one disappointment of mine was buying a "bat signal flash light" when I was a kid. I thought for sure that thing was going to beam a large bat signal in the sky. How cool! You know what though? Well first I assumed that maybe it needs to be darker outside. But night time came and that thing wasn't even a good flashlight, let alone a bat signal. They do it to kids all of the time. Like this "money making toy" I wanted. That is until my mother told me it doesn't make real money.

Sometimes food is made in illegitimate ways. Like "fake meat." People could not do the right thing, so the FDA had to step in. Not to mention the fact we are always having to inspect restaurants for bugs and mice. You can't count on a restaurant deciding to shut down on their own. It is like the car dealer talking you into buying the worst car on the lot making it look as good as possible. They don't care about you. They only care about their money.

If anyone cannot do the right thing then let them be known as untrustworthy.

Article Forty-One

The inner side. There is the left side, the right side, and the inner side. The inner side is where your heart tells you the truth of things. Some have hearts that do not speak to them at all. You should have a heart that speaks to you. Others listen to the hearts of other people, who in turn is a part of a collective of thinkers. In other words their feelings come from the ideas of others. It is like a TV dinner. Everything is already prepared for them. Just warm it up. We should create our own feelings. For that we need a broad mind and we should have an open mind, too. We should listen to all sides. We should formulate our own side out of it. We can mix what we want. We can include what we want. We can dismiss what we want.

At the same time we should not flood our thoughts with those of others. That takes things like ignoring and isolating yourself from outer beliefs. You don't want to be a product of theirs. That isn't really being any different from them. To be different from them you must come up with your own ideas and beliefs.

Article Forty-Two

Seeing people in a more realistic way. Also engaging people in a more realistic way. We should know people for what they are. They are self interested, of course. So if we are going to get anything from them then we must also give. Complements go a long way. I once read somewhere that the best complements are those that others would not think to give them. That's from the book "How To Make Anyone Fall In Love With You."

People have feelings. The police have them too. A guilty pleasure of mine is watching arrest videos. Nothing serious really, just the kind where people are belligerent. They cuss out and rant to no end until the police either have or find a way to arrest them. They are the most stubborn people on the planet. They just cannot suck up their pride for a moment and instead end up in jail over their behavior.

You can count on men being perverted. A voice in my head once said "that's why we [women] like you." It turned out that Ghandi was perverted and Michael Jackson liked a-hole… At the core, humans are an animal which is frustrated by their own intelligence. So of course a man wants to take it free. First they have to make themselves into the alpha male. They want to dominate in every way. They want to outdo and be greater than. They want no competition. They get insanely jealous over cheating partners. That's what humans are like.

However humans can also be very caring. They love the family they made. They donate when they can. They do what they can to help others. They love being nurses and doctors. They have professions just to help others. They have a spirituality which provides self control. Some go a lifetime without ever breaking the law, even the least of them. Humans are not all bad.

Giving to people is usually a bad idea unless it is family. It sends them back to their "baby nature." A baby can only depend on its mother to survive. When we give to someone, we might return them to that state and never get rid of them.

Article Forty-Three

Lonely? It is a myth that all people get lonely. I like to say "I do prefer that there are people. I'd probably go crazy on a deserted island. But I'd rather they be away in a four mile radius." I spend days in my room alone. I have a number of fun things to do. I do not get frustrated wishing others were around or to get outside for a while. Doesn't even cross my mind. I just want my time and my things to be my own. I don't want them occupied by another. I do enjoy being around family sometimes. However it does not pain me to be alone. So I don't have to worry that the kid did this or that. That my wife needs something from me. That someone ate all of my this or that. That one person wants the thermostat higher or whatever else.

Article Forty-Four

Convolution. Convolution is where things are blown out of proportion. It is where one thing has piled on another for too long. As a result things cannot be so easily managed. A light example is fast food. Those people are always adding "awesome new things" to the menu. As a result, fast food isn't fast anymore. If it was just a few things as it first was then giving it to the customer would be faster. The ironic thing is: people want it fast, not that new strange version of a hamburger. Oh, it has a pretzel bun now.

Laws on top of laws. Regulations after regulation, and permits. Demonize this to no end. Send forth warnings of all kinds against certain things, which are mostly ignored. Too many signs. Too much prohibition. Don't allow this or that. Make people do things in a certain way. Punish people who do not do things the correct way. This is possibly a danger to others (if a fool steps in) so don't allow it altogether. Systems become too complex. Those are signs that things have become too convoluted.

Article Forty-Five

Dictionary remembering. This is something I came up with that makes memories of all kinds come back to you. Take a small pocket sized dictionary. Those have only basic words. Like as basic as "tree," or "seat." and remember something by it. As a matter of fact a memory came back to me just now. One where a group I used to attend bought a new set of seats for all of us. As well as a tire swing I was once on at my cousin's house. So you get the idea. Just look at random words in that dictionary and remember something accordingly.

Article Forty-Six

Brightness. Be a bright person. Shine all the time. Nothing is better for your self image than to ruminate on things like pride and positivity. You can take it so far as to feel "drunk" on yourself. I have been there. It brightens things- like turning on a light of happiness. Lessen problematic thoughts you may have until they are just about dead never to return. You can get there. Just take it as a meditation. See the good things in life. If you can, then turn the bad things into good things. There is always a silver lining. There is always a number of "at least" thoughts. At least this or that is true. Look forward to your future. Don't be anxious about it. Be optimistic. "Wash out" bad thoughts. That is done by replacing them with better thoughts. It comes from taking a new and better look at yourself. So be bright just as a Luciferian should be.

Article Forty-Seven

Isosociety. That is the two words "isolated," and "society." I am not here that someone should put this in place. I am here to say it will naturally bring itself about. I am talking about people staying home more and more. Like with things being delivered to us. They are even using drones and machines to deliver our things to us. Not even the delivery guy will be out. After all, all good things are in your home. All good things are sent there. I was once a person with an expensive CRT TV. One of them was a monster at 32 inches. The thing weighed 200 pounds. Now I have a not so expensive TV which is twice the size. With that: inflation doesn't account for things getting better. I have things that the richest person didn't have only 20 years ago. They weren't around. They say "according to inflation this thing costs this compared to that." They are comparing an NES to a Nintendo Switch though.

Playing games online… It may not be actual socializing but as far as people go it feels just as good. We have added text to phone calls. We have added video talk too. We have things to share and discuss online. Why does a physical body have to be next to yours for it to be the "right" socializing? We have the voice. We already know the appearance. Humans are scent based creatures. If we are romantic with someone then they are probably living with us anyway.

The home is loaded with things you cannot have on the outside. While further in the past we didn't have nearly as much. That is less and less true. So many don't even go to fast food places themselves anymore. They have it delivered as with "door dash." After all, they'd like to enjoy their food while watching TV. TV is far greater than what it used to be as well. Just take YouTube, Roku, and streaming into account. We can watch any music video that exists, for one. Also home theaters are becoming more and more practical.

So as a result we will find others staying at home more and more. I don't think that's a bad thing. Bad things happen more because of groups. Not from people who just stay home and mind their business.

Maturity. I was the worst teenager you could ever imagine. Always talking trash, always in arguments with my parents. Kids can just do stupid things. At least I came out of it without doing anyone any real harm. You either grow up or down. You either live a law abiding and free life or one in prison. You either take control of your emotions or be out of control. One is always fighting. The other has found a life of peace. We get older and have to find a job. We have kids and should do them good, not be abusive. We should be patient and kind to one another. Not be someone who gets angered easily. We must foster within us a level of self control. Our parents will do their best, but most of it is up to us.

Article Forty-Nine

What hell actually is. People have not been made aware of it. I am bringing awareness of it here. Hell is not a fiery place or a tortuous place in the common sense. It isn't "the grave" either. So what is it then? Hell is a presence, not a place. It is not found on this land or that. It is founded upon reality. In one city most of the population might not be in hell. Some however could be. So I must describe what it is like being in that state. First, those in hell are more sensitive to things. Like a sultry voice. Which, for most, is quite subtle, but not for those in hell. Those in hell hear it as outright sexual. So as a result of that things are far less subtle whatever they may be. Music sounds far more odd in hell, depending on the song. You sense evil in the music. "Darkness" in even simple rock music. You can tell it is Satanic while for most it is just a rock song. Second, fantasy is reality in hell. One time I revered everything on a portable CD player. The plug in went in the headphones. The lid was left open. The disk was upside down. There was a note in another language that sounded like "you may touch the lens." The english part of that message said "never touch the lens." But the foreign message sounded like "you may." So when I turned it on (the headphones were in the power port) I heard demons speaking. So you may think you may try that at home but no, because you must be in hell yourself for it to work.

People in hell are always having visions. They can look up at the clouds, the birds, the sounds, and have visions because of them. I have a common example I often bring up. One time at about twilight I could see Venus in the sky. Which, Biblically, represents Lucifer. I saw a bat-looking black thing fall from Venus (a black cloud that is shaped that way.) It transformed into a snake-like thing with horns. Then it went over the first ray of light from the sun which was emerging. After that a new cloud appeared below Venus. This time an elegant white cloud that looked like an angel looking up at Venus. Then a black rainbow-like cloud appeared and a murder of crows (a flock of crows is called that) flocked all around, scattered, and finally, the Church bell rang, which was behind me. Without being in hell I would never have seen this.

When I was in hell at one time I was sitting close to a building that really didn't seem like it had any purpose. I was wondering what was inside. Then I sensed a demon (or maybe it was a spirit) inside frantically and endlessly looking for something, as though it was a lost soul. Then one time I was sitting at a bench among a few other benches. I was talking to voices in my mind. I saw the person in front of me place her finger to her mouth (as though to say be quiet.) Strange music was being played right in front of us. I then realized that she was trying to listen to the suffering of hell.

In hell your senses are heightened. Take taste for example. I would open a can of tuna and relish the water inside of it and eat it like it was a great cuisine. Sodas actually tasted a bit toxic however. I imagine that's what an animal would think it tasted like. I needed good smelling things so much that I doused my carpet with powder detergent. I could hear things from afar, although that was probably from a psychic nature. Spirits are always talking to you in hell. One time some started talking to me and the other asked why I wasn't afraid of them and she said "maybe he's the Devil." And the other said "oh…"

Then there were things that probably had meaning but I couldn't pick up on it. Such as why one night a star in the sky became larger and gold colored. That is the basic idea of it. There is more to it than that but I have written about it before and will in the future.

A utopia from science and technology. Humans have always struggled to build a utopia. The only way they'll get it is with science and tech. Just think: the answers to starving, housing, universal basic income, unlimited energy, cures for cancer, are all there. That is, however it is done. There are also things unknown that they'll produce in the future. Those will help in ways we couldn't personally predict. It will lead to guaranteed income. People shouldn't worry about robots and androids replacing jobs. They would do all of the work for us. We will be able to work on our own things after that. These are just facts based automated machines with no soul. Even if it is possible that an android can be imparted emotions that doesn't mean it has to be. They can be just stone cold metal and wires.

Perhaps science and tech should be funded more because they are the two with the real answers.

Such as anti crime things. Drones have already caught a lot of people. AI cameras can spot a known criminal strolling down the sidewalk. They can save a lot of lives. Wouldn't that elusive day where cancer is cured be great? Or the flu? We'd never have to worry about being sick or getting some awful illness. Maybe someday they'll even make a chemical cocktail which indefinitely expands our lives.

Article Fifty-One

Being higher class. Like it or not there are higher and lower classes in the world. I am not PC to say it, but it's true. The lowest class is the homeless. You can say that among the homeless the lowest class is the crack heads. Then you take it up a step. The next lowest class is people on government help who are barely getting by. Up one from that is the middle class. Then we get to somewhat rich people like a doctor. Finally people with more and more money until they are even the richest in the world.

Sometimes lower class people are simpletons. They grab onto whatever gets them by and don't let go. So they keep the same basic job for a long time. The upward mover is a little more motivated. They even find a fairly good job. Some get somewhere and some don't. Some struggle and toil to be rich and famous. Some rob and sell drugs out of desperation… or foolishness. Some want to be actors and singers. Unfortunately those are very difficult to break through with. At least the audience is easier to obtain thanks to online venues.

It is up to us to make that climb upward. That means doing the best we can with a plan best made. Lets at least not be low class in the way that every word we say is a cuss word, dressing funky, and with a limited mentality.

Modern controversy and morality. For the longest time Christianity dominated their form. Morality still exists. It just changed form. Currently things are sharply divided. So we have a dual form of them at once. One side has their rant against something while another is for it. If you are for it and express that then beware, there might be hell to pay. As for me I am just quiet and enjoy the show. I can blend in. I can sum a person up and tell them one thing while I tell the other something else. Political hats are an item of controversy. A guy was recently killed for having harmless political signs in front of his house. The American flag has become controversial. Yes there are those that support it and those who war against it.

If you do not talk a certain way and express your feelings correctly it could be hell for you. Calling a he a she when he wants to be called a she… that's worse than any kind of cussing. As for cussing, that used to be controversial/ immoral. Now it is more commonplace than not. You can expect property damage and harm if you do not fall in line. These things are just as powerful as a mean religion enforcing morality. In a lot of ways these things are a cult. Fortunately they are being seen as such and dispelled by some brave people.

Good reasons for being a writer. A book encompasses just about all. Inside a book you can have… art, drawings, sheet music, educational things, instructions, a story, facts, graphs, programming language, equations, poetry, religion, and more. They take up little space on a computer (the files they produce.) You can write anywhere you want to. Even if a smart phone works out better. You can take a laptop on the bus, in the park, or wherever. Books are heavy with information. Even one page can say a lot. Compared to posted videos books have a greater wallop. You can never say so much in a song. Besides you can include sheet music. You can convey a lot by the end of it. Grammar correcting software can make your book grammatically correct.

Universal basic income. Just imagine the cost cutting that comes from automated fast food places. People will start to complain that their jobs are being taken. The government is not going to allow that. So they'd either say you have to cut those prices or not employ machinery. There is the possibility of faster food production coming out. Like for seeds that grow faster or even a food replicator. A little more practically, when we reach fusion energy, that'll produce unlimited power. Androids as slaves? I wouldn't use the word slave, that's kind of dirty. We don't call our oven a slave even though it cooks for us. We wouldn't call a driverless car a slave even though it drives us around without complaint.

I see driverless cars all the time doing a good job. On any day out I can see about four or five of them zooming along safely. They do still have some hiccups but they aren't getting people into wrecks. There are drones to make homes with. There are 3D printed homes. Those save a great deal of money. Drones deliver our goods too. Machines with wheels as well although we have to get past the issue of vandalism. They should be considered mail thieves. That's what they are. Top that with some good vandalism charges. That saves money: no delivery guy needed. So, if nothing else, prices will go way down. We will have easier access to the things we really need. Tech and science might even provide us with things that are basically costless. That can free quite a bit from our budget.

Ideas for a good church. I think as Luciferians we should find a word other than church. Our's isn't a church. Church is a Christian term. Christians didn't call theirs a synagogue. Likewise we shouldn't imitate what the Christians do with their places. We should think outside of the box when determining what our place should be like. Aesthetics are an important thing to us. Often metal music is too. Our imagery would be diabolical. Great images protruding from the wall, those of devils. Lots of black candles. A gothic appearance. Black pews or rather black comfortable seats. Even a few thrones on the front row reserved for the most valuable/ important. After all, we are not being Christian.

A special day inside when it comes to halloween. Instead of a bible study group, an occult using and learning group. Maybe play Dungeons and Dragons. Instead of a piano, an electric guitar, drums, things like that. Instead of praying, a moment of magical visualization. We are going to have to have hymns. For that we have to start. A Luciferian hymn book does not exist yet.

We can still do helpful things. We can gather toys for the young and help the community. We can have a feast instead of just feeding the homeless a little. We can have a more adult group happening in which we drink and do those things that adults do. We can have a library of occult books and philosophy at hand. The preacher can instruct occult ideas. They can teach us helpful things about the world around us. They can serve as motivation and therapy.

These topics taught: maturity, human nature, benefiting from the world, individuality, success in life, earthly wisdom, self confidence, self esteem, strength, creativity, magic, science, demons, and rituals.

People can get by if they have to. They can become stronger. Strength should be fostered, not weakness. Lazy people will take every advantage they can. The Luciferian stands for strength. Christians are there to serve the weak, not us. We want strong people among us. We have said it many times before. I would say that a bit too much is just handed to us. I have known people that have gotten on government help to the scale of SSI which probably didn't deserve it. Some even higher lawyers that made it happen. In fact everyone I've known that has applied has gotten it sooner or later. Such as fat people whose "knees hurt" too much while they work.

When I have examined things I have found that these people were not taught to work as children. Children should be given chores and rewarded for doing them. I knew a hard worker who told me that if he didn't do his chores he'd be punished for it. People used to be ashamed to receive governmental help. The people at the time felt that only the deserving would take it but that isn't true anymore. People would rather move all the way to California to find work than to get assistance.

If a person is only hurting themself… by smoking, drinking, risk taking, gambling- just let them. Don't waste time trying to fix them. It consumes massive resources. It is too difficult to bother. If they are harming no one but themself then let them do it. I think they had enough warnings against smoking. People are inundated with the fact that it is harmful. Just let them go somewhere private to do their drugs. If they steal or hurt another to get those drugs, then punish them. They'll be in jail where they can't do them because of it. Prisons would be emptied. The police could pursue more important matters. If they are to quit then let it be of their own volition, their own strength.

Being a person of ideas. Which is like planting seeds. I made numerous books of video game ideas under my name Adam Jeremy Capps. They aren't bad either. They are also all free (as ebooks.) They were always a delight to create. The ideas in those books can be freely used as well "with or without credit." Those are public domain books. I like being a person of ideas. I like influencing things. I like the idea that maybe someday my video game ideas will be used all kinds. In a way that makes me a game maker.

Then there are the inventors who produce ideas for others. There are also those who provide simple but nice movie plots/ just the synopsis. As for music it is making the melodies and the melodies in music are really important. There is the idea I made of "Magic: The Encyclopedia." That is, a set of books for a D&D style game. Under the book "S" you find stores and spells. Under "P" you find places. Under "R" you find rules, and so on. I also have the idea of light buttons on a game controller where any one of four buttons have a color light. Each one can change the color of light. The game lets you interact with colors. So consider if you too would like to be a person of ideas.

Weird tech. So much tech has gone by the way side. It never had a chance to evolve because something newer and better came along. Who knows though what may have become of it. Who knows how advanced a VCR could have become.

I'm also talking about strange combinations of things. Like having an LCD (calculator graphics as they are called) game be combined with things such as lasers and fiberoptic threads. What about a tape that has fiber optics embedded within it? I can't say what for but it is an interesting concept to me. What about combining a memory card with a CD? The game can pull information from both. It could be there as a form of memory writing or game expansion. You can even change the overall nature of the game by placing a different memory card into it. I always thought that glow sticks were neat. What about a lamp that auto mixes that fluid into a glass ball? Mood rings have this sort of material which changes color based on temperature. It is only used for mood rings. How about using that material in signs and other things? That's free color changing without electricity.

We can return to old technology and figure out ways to make it better. We can add modern things to it to do so. We can invent all new ways to do so. In making neat things we can combine things in ways not considered before.

Philanthropy. You are on the winning side if you are a philanthropist. If you are doing good you can do no wrong. You are justified as such. You have good people on your side, rather than bad. The success of a nation depends on it. Waging war gets a bit out of hand. War should be for the freedom of the enslaved. I don't hate people. I generally want what is best for them. I do not want the best for bad people however. The problem with peace keepers is that they want to bring about peace in peaceful ways as opposed to stricter laws and war. I am a philanthropist because I want what is best for the world. Some people are not good at all for the world. They go around harming innocent people. I want science and tech to reach the point where we live in a utopia. Then the only issue left would be those using science and tech in harmful or evil ways.

All of the choices we have. Some choices we make are minor but still helpful. Some however are life changing. I moved from the desert of New Mexico to the city of San Francisco. That changed my whole life. I was homeless and freezing in New Mexico. I had to do something to change things. I never thought about adventuring. That was my thought for a while anyways. I didn't do it because I was an adventurer. I just wanted a better life somewhere else.

Sometimes a little spark can set off something very big. It is that first step that is the most elusive. Once that step is done you begin to walk. You start to walk faster. You eventually run, enjoying it in full. That is the start of a new hobby. One of mine was learning how to use a Gameboy game making software (GB Studio.) Learning it was not an easy thing. I practically had to know how to code with these variables and things. I stood with it. Now that software comes very naturally to me and I fulfilled a goal of not only making one game, but four. That is, Damuel 1-3 and Damuella. You may pick up the piano for the first time. You may take up painting. Maybe you like the harmonica, who knows?

Starting college can change your life. Starting a business can too. Apart from terms of success there are also just decisions that can bring you joy. Such as taking that trip to the place you always wanted to visit. Saving money for that new game console. Starting a family. Seeing that special movie in the theaters. You may have gotten where you haven't seen a theatrical movie in years. Let the choices you make bring you happiness. Let them improve your life.

Silly human traditions. There was a time when hand shaking was a normal and regular thing for people. Just the thought of grabbing onto a person's hand to greet them seems strange now. What happened? The corona virus did. People were obsessed with clean hands for a while. They had "social distancing." People wouldn't come within 6 feet of you, let alone shake your hand. Good riddance to that.

Why do people like glass windows? They'd carry a gun to protect themselves but the only thing keeping people out is glass. Doors themselves could be better secured. They are easily kicked in. Makes about as much sense as living under a volcano that can erupt at any time.

Why is it eggs for breakfast? A whole slew of foods only eaten at breakfast. Is a hamburger for breakfast any worse? Eggs and milk, that's lots of early morning cholesterol. Early morning sugar too with pancakes, cold cereal, ect. I mean coffee I can understand. People want to wake themselves up with it.

Let's paint eggs on Easter and hide them. Let's dress up on Halloween and gather candy. Then there are all kinds of mythos surrounding Christmas. All kinds of shows, songs, and books made it what it became. I'm not complaining about them though.

Take advantage of the times. There Steve Jobs and Bill Gates were doing so. They built computers in their garage which would become the highest grossing companies ever created. That in a time when home computers were a brand new phenomenon and didn't even cross the minds of most people. The Internet came around and the smart people snatched up domain names. Some made businesses early on such as eBay and Amazon. Those two are among the highest money making companies. They all took advantage of the new.

Whatever new thing a new technology would allow you to do then dive right in. Take a good look at what is catching on. Connect the two pieces. How well would this go with that? Apple made the first real smart phone and set the standard for them for a long time to come. They wanted to combine a phone with a camera and a music player. They added great quality to what was already there.

People making videos that were not made before them. Like the "Angry Video Game Nerd," a person who started off the retro gaming craze that we find on YouTube. He had the character needed just for that: a humorous take on NES games being so bad and difficult.

Sometimes it is just up to chance. When video tapes at home were due, Sony had Betamax and JVC had VHS. VHS won out. The same has happened to memory cards a number of times. One company offered theirs and another theirs until we settled on "SD cards." At least they were closer to what they should be doing. Because at the same time people were pushing things like mini CDs or advanced floppy disks. Those of course went nowhere.

Is Earth a prison? Think about it. Think about the enormous boundary between us and any other life. Death is certain. Nature in fact is always wanting to kill us. With its weather, poison, vicious animals, viruses, and other things. We don't know what life is beyond death. Maybe the worst of us were sent here earlier on. Maybe the worse of us were born from the worst of us. Then maybe the lesser sentenced were born into wealthy lives. We were given an enormous amount of material to work with, like a labor camp. The only way life can get better is to create with it. We can never just rest. It is a never ending toil.

Unknowingly Luciferian, and immature. It has been suggested that a Satanic time is among us. That is true, just not in the way that people know it. They don't identify the times as such, but it is. It is the time of Satan. People just don't know how to use the word "Satanic" when describing it. The time of Satan is a quickly unfolding thing. It came because of certain rights endowed to us. Those rights lead us to produce Satanic things. Whether music wise, TV wise, whatever. Psychology changed all around us, adding to the effect. A rejection of Christian morals came about. Science came in saying we are animals. Long held spirituality was abandoned. The world became Luciferian.

They are of an immature kind. They are like kids in a new age with new toys. They are childish people. They are yet to mature. Currently they are not easy to control. They have no self control themselves, sometimes. They are indulgent. They are more humanized. Their core has quickly changed. They are currently learning to live with it. In the meantime we have to deal with it. We know these things already. We have the knowledge and lifestyles they need. In the meantime they are free roaming and directionless.

The Simple Minded. The simple minded only know pleasure and pain. That is the basis of all life. That is the lowest denominator. They take on beliefs that have no real facts behind. They can preach a cause but when questioned about its background they draw a blank. Their philosophy is narrow and shallow. They believe in things that contract the truth. To them life is the next fast food place. They take on falsehoods of all kinds. That gets them in trouble. Yet the day it comes they feel wronged. What was wrong was their beliefs to begin with. Such as being a Sovereign Citizen. Those are people that have misconstrued the law thinking they have rights which they do not.

They let people work them up into a frenzy that caffeine is practically deadly. They feel guilty over sugar consumption. Impersonal beings tell them this is how the world should be so make it that way. Then they go about ranting thoughts and feelings that have no real relevance in the world. They love their dumb little picket signs. One day it's one thing then the next that particular thing is forgotten. Someone could do something the whole world thinks is terrible. Then some other issue quickly emerges and they've forgotten about the one before.

Perfectionism:

Should be slow. Slow and patient. "Haste makes waste." Slow and steady wins the race. You can control your actions better that way. You can keep an eye on your progress and improve a little at a time. Do what you are capable of. Don't burn yourself out.

Should be deliberate. Purpose driven. Hitting the target. Making exactly what you intended. Know what you are doing. Know how to do it. Have it well defined.

Should be calculated. Know it well. Master it. Come to understand it. Discover the best way of doing it. Learn from others if that helps. Read up on it. Know what you are doing before you start. Always look for better ways.

On the right course. Something worth perfecting. Worthy of perfection. Nothing bad that is foreseeable. Things coming along as they should. On the right path. The path that tells you you are doing it correctly.

Moved away from the wrong course. Seeing you are on the wrong course, change that. Don't let a bad thing find its way into the machine. Be aware of anything that might impede you later. Fix mistakes as they happen. Fix them before they get worse.

Willing to sacrifice the lesser. Sometimes a thing seemingly good is not. It is actually getting in the way. Determine if it does more harm than good. "One bad apple spoils the bunch."

"Out with the old, in with the new." Abandon the old and worn out. Avoid the antiquated. A thing of your time, a time of the past, may no longer hold any more magic for a younger world. Modern things succeed more.

Good enough is good enough. Why fix it if it works fine. Try not to split hairs. Sometimes over working something can ruin it.

Whatever it is, have it pay off. Have it work for you!

Then there's the people who grew up poor, rich, cultured, not cultured, disciplined, spoiled, taught well, not taught so well, drug users, not drug users, and so on. They each produce a much different thing and if you want to know a person, know what kind of family they had.

How to go treasure hunting.

New stores: Don't always go to the same store or stores. Look around for some new places you haven't been yet and try those out.

New things: Make a list of things you want and be deep with it. Consider things you may have liked in the past but you forgot about. Take a chance on something you haven't gotten before.

New tastes: Expand your tastes. Find new things to like and enjoy. That way you'll broaden the amount of things you enjoy.

Breaking the rules: Sometimes you have rules of buy this or don't buy that. Sometimes it is because they cost more. Sometimes it is because of "brand loyalty." Consider buying things aside from rules.

Know it when you see it: Sometimes you might not even know the inventory of a store you plan to go to. Sometimes you only partially know. Sometimes the stores bring in inventory they didn't have before. Sometimes you have no real plans on what to buy. You will just "know it when you see it."

Go with company: Shopping may be more fun if you bring another with you. You might even buy a couple of things for each other as a surprise. You could go to a restaurant or desert place on that same day.

Consider nostalgia: Maybe your whole intention is to only buy things of nostalgia. You might go to a toy fair or video game fair for that reason. You might find a store that exclusively sells things from decades past.

Be on the lookout and travel if you have to: Stores change all the time. New stores are always coming in. Sometimes a good store requires an hour or more of driving. Some people drive across the country buying things (as I have seen on many YouTube videos.)

Be informed: If you like comic books you might find a review of what is coming in on any given week. You can find videos of new video games being made. You can learn what businesses are coming to your city.

Follow your heart: Sometimes you just buy something for no other reason. You don't have a reason to like it, but you do.

Talks-a-lot. Some people's mouths generate their pride. It takes a person okay with himself to not be a big talker. They need to incorporate themselves into a group where they can talk to others. You might be annoyed by the type. You may have known that person that drags a meeting on too long. They have too much to say and ask. You can't even be in an elevator without them needing to socialize. It is why I avoid designer teeshirts. Someone at any time can start asking all kinds of questions about it. "I remember that" stuff. Some can't even keep quiet in a movie theater. What is worse is when they are also a loud talker. They don't just talk too much, they do so loudly. Show more than you speak. "Actions speak louder than words."

Being greater than your enemies. Just being better than them. You can't argue with success. Who is a person lesser than you to think bad of you. That can only be jealousy. "I don't need money." "I can be happy without money." Unlike you, in fine clothing enjoying fine things. Where you go home to a secure place loaded with things that those lesser people will never have. You don't need to feel bad about any trash talker if you have a nice restaurant to go to that day. At the same time they are consuming a plain sandwich. My point is, the more you succeed, the more your enemies become irrelevant.

The attributes of a strong person:

They push away road blocks. Afterall they have the strength to do so. They are not burdened by them. They can change things.

They are emotionally well. They are not sensitive in a way where they live their lives unwell. They are not easily swayed or stirred. They live happy lives.

They are self confident. Pride is a big motivating factor for them. It is why they are ready and willing to work. It is why mistakes do not stifle their progress.

They are capable people. They can go the extra mile on any given thing. They last long and work hard. They have mastered the things they do. They have a good solid body of work to show from it.

They are better leaders. They can motivate others because they can motivate themselves. It takes the strong to make the strong. They have dominant personalities (but not abusive ones.)

They are less of a burden. They can and do work. They are a benefit to society. They put in their fair share and would rather their accomplishments come from their own hands.

They can commit to things. Without commitment there is no success, just dreamers. They get things done. They see things through. They become more and more better at what they do.

They are more revered and looked up to. They are masters over their lives.

Rooms of productivity. Maybe you can even have a job with what you produce according to the equipment you own. That equipment can be a number of different things. A 3D printer. People can produce things on 3D printers, machines that are getting better all of the time. Some even recycle plastic to produce new thread. There are all sorts of options with what to make with them. You could have a sticker maker alongside, producing and cutting stickers to be sold. You could use epoxy in various ways. You can use a sewing machine to make or to modify clothing. You could buy a machine that prints images onto shirts. You can work with leather. Some stores specialize in leather… raw, yet unused leather. There are stamps which embed an image into leather. There are hole punchers for them. There are ropes to tie things together. I tried it once.

There are simple cheap electronic boards which allow you to copy and paste simple programming on them. Those can make a little gaming device or something. For that you can 3D print a shell. If you take the time, you can create a few of your own video games to place on it. Software that helps you make games for old systems is coming around more and more. Differently, you can grow plants to sell, like flowers or a cactus. Maybe you'd like to work with clay. You can print out cards of any kind (tarot, pop culture stuff, all new games.) You can work on books. Word processors are easy to come by. There are online services which print and sell your books. Maybe you might even make them yourself.

You can make any number of electronics from flash lights to small musical keyboards. You can have an office which repairs old broken electronics. You might do carpentry. You might make jewelry even with just semi precious stones. You may gather and melt metal into bars. You can make metal bars of old copper or aluminum. There are more choices than this too.

What cartoon animals are like. The mouse is usually on top. They are just all around liked the most with the best cartoons behind them. The cats are weirdos. Just think about how often that is true. The goats are rare and far between. You don't often see them. The snake is sleazy. The pigs are the worst. I'd rather be anything other than any pig found in cartoons. The dog is not easy to define. They are kind of bossy. The ducks are always crazy and temperamental. The bears are often homely. They are friendly and social. Rabbits can be just about anything. They vary. Horses are rare. After all, a standing horse just doesn't make sense. Maybe that is the same reason why you don't find goats. Foxes are often cool characters. It is all true most of the time. People who change the world. Simple minded people follow after common things. They detest change. They haven't the power to change. People who are different embody change in the world. Should enough simple minded people band together from what they see of that person, then they are converted. Different people– those apart from commonality– naturally produce followers. Simple minded people cannot change of their own volition. It must be identified in others first.

After all it takes something different to make a difference. That difference must be a good difference for a major change to occur. Some radical mind. A person who is clever at stirring the pot. A person whose music has never been heard before. That music has a very inviting new sound. It "wows." It used to come from controversy. It still does but not nearly as much. It could be said though that the controversy of today is not that of tomorrow. So find what actually is nowadays before trying to be "controversial." On the other hand, that is getting people hurt.

Also with clothing it always feels better both seeing it yourself and knowing you look better to others. Maybe things have

The most important decisions. Lets not ruin our whole lives like some young people have when they commit a horrible crime. They barely knew life at all before they were placed in prison for twenty years or more. Even a lifetime. Getting higher education is a major life changing decision. Just choose the right major. You wouldn't want to ruin your life over a degree that does nothing. Moving might be an important decision especially if you are living in the slums. It can change your life otherwise. If you move to a larger city. If you prefer the mountains, then that too. We just have to pay for certain things like clothes, food, and hygiene products. Drugs can ruin your life. They'd take an otherwise good and successful person and drive them into a living grave. The times when I was confronted with it I denied it. I knew that the only way I could take it a second time (and a third and so on) was if I did it once. The first time is the worst choice as it is a start. So I never once took them. I knew a deceptive person who tried to convince me that "it is just a cheap high [crack.]" He was implying that it is easy to quit, which it is not.

Don't go to pawn shops unless you absolutely must. I used to have nothing. I was always going to the pawn shop to get money then and now. Just such a bad habit. Now I have things, a number of good things. If we can do bloodwork we can determine if we have any health issues that we need to attend to. We may discover that we have high cholesterol. In older age that can lead to a heart attack or stroke. We should diet and exercise. I don't believe we have to overwork ourselves in exercise. Just enough to get our blood flowing.

There are choices to make. Some prevent bad things from happening. Some cause good things to happen. Some change our lives for the better. Some just make our environments better. Some bring us good things and others bring about bad. One thing is true: the choices we make today can improve our lives forever.

Cool (and smart) heads prevail. Tempered ones lead to disaster. Worry doesn't lead anywhere. It makes you think you'll be incompetent when (if) the bad thing comes. Surely you won't be able to take care of such a thing (you think.) Truth is at least honorable. Secrets and denial brings about suspicion. It makes them know that you are hiding something and will try to get away with it some more, were they to believe your lie. One hot headed day can lead to jail. I have felt the frustration that just about makes me open my mouth and start cussing at everyone. Thankfully it never led to that, but I understand it. Drunk people act foolish. Going back to past things. VHS got pretty fancy towards the end. They are good at recording. Good DVD recorders were hard to come by. They should become more valuable. While people collect them more and more the prices will go up. Just as what happened with old video games. It is just that VHS tapes are doing so more slowly. Records and record players are making a comeback. You can buy both again. People find physical media a novelty. Some like records, others CDs, and some like to collect cassettes. I like the cuteness of a cassette.

If any old tech is coming back the most it is video game related. That means new machines for old systems. You name them. They probably have a clone system. New games are being made for them. Then sometimes all of the old games are compiled into a new system.

There are a lot of good, though old cartoons out there. There are a lot of old video games, music, movies and so on, which are enjoyable. They have aged well too. There is a lot to pull from as proven by the fact that sequels are being made. Remakes of old cartoons and movies too. Why not? It was good back then and it remains so. Remakes don't even fully capture the good nature of them. You have to go all the way back.

Sometimes I prefer a disposable battery over a chargeable one. In pocket radios for example. Also the pocket radio has to be analogue, not digital, or the battery is quickly wasted. Given that though, two AA batteries can last two weeks in the thing. Certainly in a watch too which can last five years or more that way.

LCD games have a long battery life too. LCD games can really put the tech to good use sometimes. It just depends on how they are made. Some LCD games are the worst you can find. But some use the ideas best for them. Such as sudoku, board games, and gambling games (slots, poker). Nintendo's "Game and Watch" series of LCD games did a good job at it too.

People go back to the past for the fun of it. Who knows, maybe they will start bringing back a lot of it. If nothing else it is a neat novelty. I like to think that nothing is gone forever. It can be fun having a large amount of things to fool around with.

How to make a good video game. First, the mechanics must be right. If you can't control the character right then all of the rest will fall apart. The music has to be good. Without it the game is annoying. The game has to have substance instead of being something like a collectathon. The challenge has to be fair. The game shouldn't cheat the player even if it is difficult. Some games would benefit from being amusing and charming. Like being in mushroom land, it is just a fun place to be. Most of all the game has to be fun and involving. If it has that then all the rest will fall together. Good ideas need to be present too. I have written close to 20 books which contain free ideas. "Notebook of New Video Game Ideas" 15 of those. "Binder of New Video Game Ideas" 1 of those. "Special Papers of New Video Game Ideas" 2 of those. Those books are under Adam Jeremy Capps. They are free eBooks and free to use with or without credit.

The most wicked video games. There were games that even had a kind of Satanic flair to them. There is Dragon's Revenge, a pinball game. The Immortal. Altered Beast. Mortal Kombat. Golden Axe. Super Ghouls and Ghosts. Blasphemy. Bloodstained: Ritual of the Night. Lots of Christians classify Final Fantasy as Satanic. Kemco has an unforgettably strange and wicked feeling set of NES games. I would say "The Uninvited" most of all.

How kids should be raised. I have seen both spectrums. I was raised by a bad parent and raised by a good one, at different times. Maybe you are already perfectly right and need no advice. After all, I just have common sense here. A kid needs to be happy to grow up well. While some parents celebrate all sorts of holidays with their kids, some do not. The ones who don't miss out on a lot. Vacations are another good thing to include in your child's life. You don't have to spoil them but at least give them nice things on their birthday and Christmas time. You might choose to give them chores. If you do that, it may set them up to be good workers later in life. A hand should never be raised. Discipline is a good thing but abuse certainly is not. Consider if drinking alcohol makes you abusive in any way. Some parents really shouldn't be drinking for that reason. Guide your child with the right kind of encouragement. Let them find their own influences. Let them find their own tastes.

Nice kinds of foods for your consideration. Cherry cider has been the most elusive for me. I love the stuff. A little town in New Mexico used to export it all over the state. I found it in a store close to the mountains of Colorado. I haven't seen it once for decades now. Apple cider on the other hand, that is easy to come by. Baklava is a nice underrated desert. Seems like that should be more common than it is. As strange as it sounds, rice water is a nice drink. A good Mexican dish is the Chile Relleno. It's green chili fried with cheese. Oolong tea is nice. That is tea which was slightly fermented. It has a "woodsy" taste. A good tropical mixed drink is the Blue Hawaiian. A Reuban is a good tasting sandwich. Its ingredients may say otherwise: rye bread, sauerkraut, russian dressing or thousand island, swiss cheese, and corned beef. That's potent! Then there are fried mushrooms with ranch sauce.

The basic nature of the sides:

The light side: Less selfish, more selfish. More giving. Outward over inward. Self sacrificing. Philanthropic. Helpful. Higher morals. Moral driven. Less indulgent. Less "sinful." More spiritual. Not animalistic. God serving instead of ego serving. Strength in weakness. Heaven minded over world minded. Repressed emotions.

The dark side: Selfish. Centered on self. Less giving. Inward over outward. Never self sacrificing. Self serving. Morals are irreverent. Earthly, worldly. Pleasure seeking. Sins are irreverent. More physical and less spiritual. Animalistic. Ego serving. Self found strength. Focused on the world around them. Strong expression and enjoyment of emotions.

The gray side: Balance seeking. Moderation seeking. Partially selfish. Partially giving. Both outward and inward. Willing to sacrifice a little. Selectively helpful. Choice morals. Partly moral driven. Sometimes spiritual. Serves both God and self. Not overly strong but strong enough. Loves both heaven and earth. Medium expression of emotions.

Things we've lost. Magazines. There is a small amount left. Not nearly as much and none of the kind I'd really enjoy. Certainly no more gaming magazines, or at least almost none. They used to come with surprises of all kinds such as new games coming out and reviews of current ones. We are what you could call "information spoiled." No more going into a video store to selectively rent a movie. It gave you such a good sense of what was available. You could physically see them.

We are also "music spoiled." I used to wait forever for my favorite music video to come on. I had to pay a lot for a cassette or CD. As a result I greatly enjoyed it. To hear an old song I had to get a CD or wait a long time for it to appear on the radio. Then the internet came out and for a while I was in heaven. I could suddenly hear every little song I ever enjoyed. I even branched out quite a bit. Over time though, it all became a dime a dozen.

TV used to be too boring to do it alone. There was no YouTube. So we were compelled to do other things like read.

We did gain things though. Car trips used to be nightmarishly long when I was a kid. They were the worst kind of boring. I can only imagine now though. Kids with the internet and tablets in the vehicle. We can pick and choose what we want to buy because of the internet. We are not dependent on our surroundings to find it. We have maps and things like that on our phones. Things are better because of tech, overall.

Greater things come from solitude. The first thing that a person in school should attend to is their education and their friendships go second. You may not even always have those friends. Listen to your teachers first and foremost. Be a thinker in your time alone. Come up with brilliant ideas in your solidarity. Most people accomplish nothing in life. They just endlessly roam about with a group. That group is there to produce momentary pleasures. If I had a kid I would homeschool him or her. School can be a bad influence. It had a bad influence on me and I have observed that in others. I was harmless when I was at home in my room gaming.

The best patterns of thoughts:

Bright Side Thinking– That is seeing the good in the bad. That is in "at least this is true" thinking. It is in seeing the better side of life. It is turning your head towards more lovely things.

Pride– That is a good thing to ruminate over. Nothing boosts your inner feelings like pride does. You can quickly go from down and out to up and happy with some good pride circulating in your mind. You will also find yourself more capable of doing things.

Optimal-Pathic reasoning– See the whole and overall picture of something. Guide your thoughts towards more important things. Come to understand what deserves more understanding. Look for the problems and the ways to solve them.

Self esteem boosts– Think better of yourself. Don't let others diminish that. They only do that to you because of jealousy or hatred. See the better side of you. Consider that you are an important and valued person. People may think better of you than you realize. There is always something or another to be proud of.

Anti-guilt– Just don't feel guilty. Learn and move on and let it go. People may have already done so themselves. If they still harbor negative feelings about you you'd probably notice. Some things just can't be fixed, repaired, or mended.

Self understanding– Be interested in learning about yourself. Discover what you like or could like. Know what you love. Consider where it could be found. Go back to your past and brighten your heart once more by enjoying them.

Uniqueness– Avoid common thoughts. Common thoughts are very common. The issues of today, for example, occupy the thoughts of the majority. Be different and think differently. Have a whole array of thoughts of your own. Think outside of the mind cage that others are in.

Inventive thoughts– Come up with useful new ideas. Take on philosophy that others do not. Seek the broader thing. Generate ideas which others do not possess.

Minimal anger– Anger is a painful emotion. For some it can take all kinds of mental work to diminish and remove it from their life. If for some reason you like the feeling then nevermind this. By reading my books and using them you will probably find yourself less angry and less frustrated.

Optimism– Look forward to your future. Think more about the goodness it might bring than the bad. Once you get it you'll be all the more happy. You can create a good future for yourself. Think everyday just how much closer you are to your goal.

Visualization– Good visualization is founded upon strange feeling thoughts. They are generated alongside music, usually instrumental music. You might even try symphonic black metal. It is not thinking about simple things like "the beach." It goes far deeper than that.

Anti-worry– So many people have said "worry doesn't solve any problem" and they are right. By the time you get to the problem you find yourself able to cope with it. As for me the only way I've found my way out of it was to just refuse to feel it.

Happy thoughts– Of course we should have happy thoughts. Just tell yourself you are happy. Tell yourself you are having a good day. Then that'll come true. Be happy with the things you've got. Reflect on all good things.

Positivity– Be as little negative as you can be. Don't ruminate on bad things. Turn your focus to something that feels better. Don't feel sorry for yourself. Don't be dragged down. Lift yourself up. Think about the good things you have.

Patience– Patience leads to better work. Patience leads to less anger. It leads to less frustration. It brings more calm. It makes you less worried. It has you doing things at a slow but sure pace. It prevents many bad things from happening. It can even keep you from doing harm and getting in trouble over it.

Build a presence online. Even when you are not online yourself, you are still there in another way. I have about a hundred books online. I am sure that someone or another is reading one of them at any given time. I've had hundreds of thousands of downloads on Google Play Books. A person can also post videos, pictures, art, and diaries. I like to say that once a thing is done it is always done. It is posted after it is done and it takes on a life itself without you ever having to touch it again. The better the quality the better your luck. You could even be programming new video games or become a part of a party that is doing memorable things.

Leaders evolving their inner circle. They should consider… trustworthiness. Someone who would not stab them in the back. Someone not so envious of them. Someone they can depend on. Someone who is actually interested in helping their leader. Leaders should have proud people be in their inner circle. Instead of someone with low self esteem. They should be good dedicated workers. They should be smart, competent. They should be mature. They shouldn't be the kind of people that throw tantrums. They should be level headed. You shouldn't have to always be telling them what to do. They should learn fast and remember well. They should know how to do things without over-repeated instructions. They should like you. They should show that. Those you choose for your inner circle should have a clean record and not take drugs. They should be happy people that enjoy life and have no ill wishes towards others.

The pawns in any game. Their attributes. They are first to complain. They cannot have things simply. They must be in control. That means that they will need to bring forth the manager. They have nothing to speak of themselves, just others. They are lazy and unwilling to contribute a damn thing. They are do-nothingers. They are narrow minded. They are easily influenced. That's a big one there: easily influenced. That means they are easy to control and disposable. They are foolish in their lives.

They want to get the best thing possible done. They are self improvers. Over time they grow better than others. They are more solitary. Just like a chess board. The pawn is many, the king is one. They are not easily influenced. They consider the true worth of a thought. They think outside of the box. They take advantage of timely things. They are perfectionists. They don't settle on the lesser. They go up and up and up. They are well guided. They are not guided by the foolish. They do not waste time. Benefiting from the past. Most people aren't watching movies that are 50 years old. Most aren't reading books of the far past. Most are not listening to classical music. Then there are some that are truly obscure. Like the less popular movies from 50 years ago. The less popular classical music. Those that go far outside of Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven. To make my point… these things are lush with influences. Influences you can use and none would be any wiser. I in fact see it happen sometimes. Melodies taken from old music, for example.

They don't want your success. They'll cut you down because they don't like you being so high up. It just speaks a plain and immovable truth about you. They can't argue with success. Usually a person doesn't want to be friends with someone who is high above them. It just feels strange. That person is more likely to make a good life for their friend. That way they are evened out more.

Article Ninety-Seven

My perfect home. I would have the obvious in it such as a home theater, nice furniture, brick walls, and so on. I would have tiles or wood flooring. Those are less disgusting. I would have a tent on the roof and a comforter blanket. My blanket would be my only clothing as I look up at the stars. The house would have a large radius. In the center, a weeping willow tree and a bench. That spot would have no roof. I would have all kinds of retro gaming things inside of it. Whatever that may be, from clocks and trash cans to magnets and magazine racks. My shower would be a more open area than a tight fit as they normally are. I would walk into the shower instead of climb in. My bed would be up high. No reason really. I just think it's fun up there. In the yard I would have a tall swing. The kind that adults are better off enjoying. Also a porch swing.

My bedroom would have a laundry chute. I would just throw the clothes into a hole and they'd land near the laundry machine. My hallways will have black lights, strobe lights, electro-illumenescence light or just regular light to choose from. Like a panel where I press a button for whatever one. My hallways will be full of posters. They'll be retro gaming or movie based. I would have traditional art here and there. Whatever paintings I particularly like.

Maybe I'd have a Halloween themed room. It would contain the roster of it. Bats, black cats, skeletons, witches, pumpkin buckets, ect. Even pens, pencils, and paper that are Halloween based.

I would also have a more closed off bed. One that shuts the light off a little more and brings a safe feeling. I would have a library that focuses more on magazines, manga, comics, and strategy guides over traditional books. Instead of a sauna I would have a mist room. Of course I would have a jacuzzi in my home. I would have stained glass windows. I would have nice lamps. I wouldn't have a dishwasher. That's too much trouble for one person. I would have a nice ice machine. One that I could get a good amount of ice from within 20 minutes.

I would have an excellent gaming room. I would have an office with things to create with. From the more ordinary to the more complex. I would have some doorways have crystal beads hanging down. Retro gaming blankets can also serve as doors. Such as rose and blue quartz with a hole and thread going through. I would use glow in the dark paint. I would focus on lavender colors and other pastels such as pale yellow.

Life as an RPG game. When you anger someone that is casting fire. When you energize someone that is lightning magic. When you blow away (with wind, that is) someone, that's wind magic. When you shake the foundation that is quake magic. When you accomplish a meaningful goal, you level up. If you have accomplished 10 major goals then you are a level 10 accomplisher. Your treasure chests are what you find in the world. Some treasure chests are hidden. When you calculate a quest to engage in, that's your journey in the game. Hopefully it's meaningful. You can give yourself a new name just as you can in a classic RPG. Find your greatest foes and beat them. They are not people, but rather life's obstacles.

Different kinds of talking. Some have an endless amount to say. They speak rapidly. Some speak without substance. They just say anything. Some talk lots, some talk very little. Some are more pertinent than others. Some are factual and others are opinionated. Some complain all of the time. Some talk mostly about the past. They have all kinds of stories. Some people brag a lot. Some talk to anger others. That is actually their goal. Some talk rudely and crudely. Some are downright condescending. Some are full of slander and cussing. Most of their vocabulary is made up of cuss words. The same few endlessly. Some actually talk more about others than themselves. Some actually have compliments. Some ask questions. Some stay on topic more than others.

The best ones: stay on point. They do not speak too fast. There is substance to what they speak of. They are selective with what they say. They think before they speak. They are not too opinionated. It is better to not discuss religion and politics. They are not offensive with what they say. They don't need to pepper their words with cussing. They can compliment others. They want to learn about others so they ask questions.

Modern… controversy, morality, philosophy, and ideology. There was a time when controversy was a super seller. Now the worst of the worst has been done… again and again. It isn't that controversy has gone away. That would probably never happen. No, it just found a different place to be. You're not going to find it in cuss words. That is normal talk in today's time. Not only one here and there. Some people use more cuss word words than they do regular words. The wall against that has been demolished. You won't find it in violence. You won't find it in things sexualized. Those things are a dime a dozen. They are the new normal. Everyone is encouraged to be their sexual self. No priests or popes are stopping anyone. Be as free as the wind. Just go after your desires. You can be lazy. It just means that you are disabled. There are no morals against that. People do not dive into deep topics as they once did. Modern philosophy is shallow and one-minded. There are new sins to replace the old ones. These things are still around. They just changed forms. They changed in a way that people would never have predicted. It makes me think about the future. What will they be forty years from now?

Article One Hundred And One (101)

A scary night. One homeless night I was laying down on a bench. My thoughts were wandering. Then, suddenly, I became fixed on the image of an African man holding a bat. He felt bad because he had to eat it. My mind was locked on that thought for hours. All I could see in my mind was that bat. All I could feel was disgust. Then, suddenly, my mind was no longer locked on the image. I rose, I ran, I fell to my knees and felt that death had just flown over me.

Article One Hundred And Two (102)

People who think they are better than you. When it comes to spiritual people, don't let anyone think they are better than you. Christians have been doing it from the start. They have never had just a small number of hell fire talkers. They are just projecting their own insecurities against you. Moral people would make you feel lesser than them. Maybe that's what is in it for them. It lets them feel superior and a worthy teacher. Their positions might be a cover up. That has often been so in the past. These pervy religious people. They could be totally disgusting on the inside. They could be ravenous on the inside. They mess with the freedom of others. They'd snatch you and your whole life up into their miserable cause. So avoid them like hell fire.

Article One Hundred And Three (103)

Being called selfish. If anyone calls you selfish then mark their observations as perversity. It is contrary to self sustenance. At the heart of it they don't want you being who you are, which is yourself. They would take that away. They'd compel you to take none and give all. They'd take yourself away from who you are. They would literally want you to be without anything. They hate you. They want your spirit and soul to leave your body. They want to take you over and control you. They want to remove you from your steering wheel. They probably envy you and who you are.

Article One Hundred And Four (104)

Being happy. It is not just one thing but a set of things. It has to include not worrying. You cannot worry and be happy at the same time. That goes with other emotions. Anger keeps you from happiness. You need high self esteem to be happy. You need pride to be happy. If you are optimistic then you are one step closer to happiness. If you enjoy the things you own then you are more happy than someone who collects meaningless things. The more appreciation we have the better. We need ideal relationships with others. Some marriages are great but others entail misery. Good hobbies and good rest, I would include those too.

The salt of the earth (to a Luciferian.) Who are among the most valued members of society? Who deserves the most praise and honor? Whether or not they are Luciferian themselves, they can be Christian or Buddhist, that doesn't matter, they include: people who preserve peace. Those who bring about peace. Those that bring about justice where justice is needed. Those of helpful professions such as: nurses, fire fighters, the police, judges, therapists, scientists, inventors, and anyone that reduces human suffering. Those that raise their children and certainly not anyone who abuses them. They make the future a better place. If they live to help people then they are in this list. So too if they reduce suffering, save lives, and improve lives.

The sugar of the earth. That is, "the fun bringers." They carry forth a childish aesthetic. They are great movie makers. They are also great video game creators. They may make things like card games and board games as well. They are entertainment makers. Such as sports. They create good books. They produce sugary things such as candy and soda. They operate neat little stores. The kind that have anything and everything. They even make theme parks. They make the world a more fun place to be. They work against the dull to bring about the charming. They bring joy into our lives.

Look into the world. Travel. Go to wonderful places in your lifetime. You wouldn't want to die without having seen the best places. So plan a vacation to your most favorite spots. Find things and discover things. Think up something you would really want and then go searching for it. Attend a new group if it looks like what they do would be fun for you too. Such as a swimming or yoga group. You might ask around. I had a friend once who showed me a Church which frequently had mini classical concerts. He also showed me a small bookstore in the middle of nowhere which had jazz concerts. I would have never known.

There are numerous places you can visit. Like art museums, aquariums, the zoo, or you could go bowling.

People live differently. For some, life is a journey. They are always traveling and seeing new places like on tour or whatever else. For some, life is a quest. They have an objective to meet. They have a goal to reach. They are paid to find that goal. For some, life is a permanent vacation. You have to be rich for that to be so. They go on cruise ships and are always staying in new far apart places. Then for some life is labor. They work more than they sleep. They have a demanding job. Some lives are in the arena. Such as sports people. Others are in the theater or TV. They live to entertain others. They are perpetually on stage. For others life is a gathering of people. They teach them or they preach to them. They run groups and the groups run them.

My lessons on music. A style I created is called "dark form." It includes a wood wind which carries atmosphere and the only real melody. There is an instrument that contrasts between consonant music and dissonant chords. Then there is percussion that makes rapid repetitive sound, at least mostly.

The triad is important. With a major scale: the tonic, the third, and the fifth. In a minor scale: the tonic, the diminished third, and the fifth. So for C major: C, E, and G. In G minor: G, B flat, and D. If you emphasize these notes with repetition, frequency, and duration, your music will not be atonal. Melody is one of the most important things. It is the soul behind the music. If you are not satisfied with your melody then you probably should make it better. It brings about all the charm that music can have. Then there are ways of producing music. You can be entirely traditional and perform it yourself. So you have an instrument to choose. Some are more difficult than others. Personally I like the harmonica. No batteries or power. Fits in your pocket. It's a versatile instrument. Or you could use a notation software. That's electronic sheet music. I use a thing called chip tune software. With it you can produce real video game music. Which for me is most commonly the NES. A little music theory goes a long way. You can't go without it. It can simplify things for you and speed up the whole process. A thick music dictionary may be helpful too. Music theory books as well such as for counterpoint or whatever you prefer.

Walking. I used to walk a great deal. I'd walk 15 minutes just to reach a gas station in a small town. I almost had a heat stroke once. It was my idea for me and a few others to walk to this tall hill. Things always look closer than they turn out to be. I was wearing sandals. When we were returning they just fell all apart. There were stickers ahead. My family had to rush their vehicle over to save me. Then there was a time in Tucson when I thought I would walk to a restaurant that I often went to. I was 13. I didn't bring any water. I could have died because it was so far away. Then some nice people gave me a ride there and thank God they were nice people. I walked 12 miles to my family's home. I think I did that twice. I cannot fully remember. I went from one city to another city. I walked the stretch of Albuquerque more than once. That took about 6 hours or more. One time I was wearing shorts and my friend said "you can kick the shit out of someone with legs like that." Day by day I would walk all across town (in Clovis New Mexico.) Once when I was 13 a suspicious van was close behind me going slow. I walked into a person's home to tell them about it. They acted like I did something wrong. When I went back outside however the van was long gone. I used to walk far into the Arizona desert to "meditate on Satan" as I called it. I had walked so far that I was lost. There were these signs with blood on them. There were dead rabbits there. There was a crossroads. I chose one and ended up at a restaurant (not the same one as earlier mentioned) where my aunt was working. She got me some iced tea and ice cream.

Article One Hundred And Eleven (111)

The world is vast. Have you ever thought about what is going on at any given time? At any given time… how many people are having conversations right now? About entirely unique lives in places much different than your own. How many people are doing what they are doing at any given moment. What are they doing? Are they cooking? Cleaning? Working? Resting? Dreaming? All kinds of things are going on at this very moment. It can be as vague as a person buying their first vehicle. Roaming around in a library or something. Many birthdays are being celebrated at this moment. Lots are seeing their first few hours of life. Tragedy is occurring. Others are winning big. Someone is painting their house. A parent is watching their kid play baseball. Another is doodling something on paper. Some priest somewhere is preaching.

Self Control. I believe in strength and self control. The kind of self control that deters anger. I don't believe in that nonsense that you must "vent" your anger or else it'll erupt. Anger is a painful emotion that I choose not to have. "Cool heads prevail". If people don't control their sexual feelings they can turn into a pervert. Porn is no longer good enough. It fools them into thinking it is acceptable in the real world. Not just from porn but from things like music entertainment as well. Buying a scratcher is okay now and then. Your odds of winning continue to climb. Drugs altogether should not be taken. Don't be one of those people who explode in a fast food place because it took too long. These kinds who trash the whole place because the order wasn't right. In the heat of passion they get arrested. Some of them for very serious matters. A self centered inpatient woman once pushed an old man off the bus. He was in the way. He took too long to get out, she felt. She went on her day after that as normal. She was arrested later. That man had died in the hospital.

Article One Hundred And Thirteen (113)

All's well that ends well. I was homeless for a year. I never thought I'd get back on my feet but I did. There are worse things than that though. Things might be bad but they can get better. Sometimes you have to pick yourself up with your own two hands.

Leaving a relationship is heart breaking at first but no one ever perished from it. We all lose in the end. We die. So we should make things as good for ourselves as we can. We should work towards being remembered. We should contribute something to the world. I used to be afraid of going back to jail. So I wrote book after book and early on that was my inspiration. I wanted to have a presence online even when I wasn't technically online. I could dream that perhaps my books were going places and people were thinking about me.

A fantasy of mine. Schizophrenia gave me this delusion. I actually believed it would come about. That is to say, that everyone on earth was vacated other than my family and a few other loved ones. That was fascinating to think. It could make a good movie. So what would you do if that came true for you? What would you and your loved ones do if you were the only ones on earth, say, twelve of you? I guess there are all kinds of unperishable foods you could eat until who knows how long. You should probably preserve the meat you find in stores else you'll be killing cows and chicken to get it. Which is okay, just less convenient. You might even camp out at Walmart. As for energy, I suppose a good solar panel setup would do fine. So you wander around looking for those where they may be found. You can drive around in whatever vehicle you wish to. Most of them should have gas in them. The gas station has more. There are also fuel based generators you can use. You could have the pick of the liter when it comes to choosing a home to live in, such as a mansion. You could roam all around collecting all kinds of electronics and what have you. Wouldn't that be great?

Article One Hundred And Fifteen (115)

Similar influences. A big part of idea production comes from offering your own new twist on something. For example, the death star of star wars and the borg cube of star trek. Then there is a pyramid version in Lexx. Link from Zelda looks like Peter Pan. It happens all of the time without people noticing. In Super Mario Bros Mario climbs a bean stock to cloud land, a place of gold coins. That is straight from Jack and the Beanstalk. It's just people wanting to come up with their own version of things. Brought together as a whole it can be a recipe for a good movie.

Article One Hundred And Sixteen (116)

Nonsensical things. Sugar fear. Would you know that me and my generation grew up on sugar? We ate sugary breakfasts in many ways. From cold cereal to pop tarts. I never got diabetes and neither did my siblings. Other things that don't make sense: glass windows without bars. You might as well have no protection at all. Someone just comes along and easily breaks the thing. Doors are easy to kick in. Nevermind the dead bolt.

Eggs at breakfast. Having any kind of traditional breakfast. This does make more sense than the others but the thought of items for breakfast being relegated to certain things is strange. Atonal music… music that goes all over the place and has no structure. Such classical music emerged in the 1900s. People love it. I can't stand it. Abstract art. Sometimes it is done right. Most often it is just a lazy way of painting.

Super concentrated dish soap. I used the more watered down kind and it produces more than enough cleaning power. I still only have to use a little for a lot of cleaning. Name brand aspirin. Aspirin is aspirin. Name brand peanut butter. Peanut butter is peanut butter. Then other name brands such as sponges. Metal razor shaving. Just use an electric razor. It is many times quicker and you won't get the littlest cut.

Cursive writing. It does not look nicer. It looks sloppy. It is not faster than regular writing. Things like vampires make no sense. Where are all of the dead bodies drained of blood? Ones with teeth marks. Who's going to miss that? Zombies shouldn't be a problem. Just wear things they cannot bite through. The human jaw can't even bite through leather. Get a helmet and stuff. Having large pit bulls. More power to you if you own one. But those have been known to snap out of nowhere and seriously injure their owners.

Remember this one: commercials that make you laugh. As for a car insurance commercial, for example. What does buying car insurance have to do with laughter? They make you laugh your way into buying it.

Criticism. "All publicity is good publicity." The more feelings you stir up the better you'll do. Popular people receive the most criticism. So stir people up. Subtly say bad things. Fireworks will go off all around you. It doesn't mean making a bad and lazy product. You have to be wrong in the right way. It doesn't have to do with the quality of something or the lack of it. Controversy changes over time. What was once controversial no longer is, but new things now are. So you can ride off of that cloud. Maybe half of the population supports you but the other half does not.

Article One Hundred And Eighteen (118)

Comparing the light to the dark. In fact the Bible says that Christ's are the children of light. They go off of the solar calendar. The night time and full moon has often been stated as being Satanic. By the way, Luciferian is Venus. That would be the twilight or the pinnacle of Satanism. Satanists go off of the lunar calendar. The light side is about weakness. Through their God they are made stronger that way. They do things like turn the other cheek and love their enemies. As a result they are blessed by God. The light side dresses like an adult and acts like one. The Satanic one is more childish. Acting like an adult and leaving behind your childish nature is a thing of Christianity (according to Paul.) The light side is not a worldly one but rather one spiritual. Those of the other side revel in the world and all it has to offer. The light side says "give all you can." It is contrary to human nature in ways such as reducing pride, lust, greed, and so on. Their God makes them who they are. A Luciferian makes himself/ herself what they are. We are the goats and they are the sheep. Someday we will live alongside each other.

Article One Hundred And Nineteen (119)

Lessons on communication. What matters most in a relationship is the way you talk to someone else. Some rant on and on and on about themselves, with little to no interest from others. Others compliment another and their compliments go far. They want to hear more from you. What's better, you raise their self esteem when you do. Some people yell out of nowhere. Like on the city bus or on the street. Some guy is just yelling something or another. Those people are scary. I can't even pass them by without wanting the hell out of there. Some are over-smart talkers. They say interesting facts and things. Anything that makes them feel smarter than others. Some people have fancy kinds of thoughts. They don't serve any purpose other than being amusing. "Novelty thoughts" you could say. They sound wise yet you just don't know what to do with those ideas. You can't find any purpose for them other than them sounding neat. Some people's vocabularies are flooded with cussing. They think it sounds cool, they think it makes them a fitting-in person. Everything they say has to have cussing in it or else they are not making their point. Some people mumble, others stutter, some cannot sound out "s" correctly. I would say record your own voice and work on it. You wouldn't want to keep that sound. Some people are extra polite when really they just don't want to say anything to you. They are not word exchangers. They prefer the quiet.

Simple minded philosophers. First they locate a definable enemy. This person (or more often group) is bad because… And I must defeat them for (these) reasons. It does not matter how abstract it is. They can form things from nothing. They have a way of piecing things together. The puzzle doesn't fit yet they make it fit. The mightier their enemy the greater they are for fighting them, or so they think. They've got to be a hero after all. They must teach others about the enemy. They've got to share their beliefs about it. "They must fight this enemy together." It gives them purpose. Philosophers of nonsense emerge and unite. It gives them sustenance. How intricately bad is their enemy! Whose deeds have affected life at its core. Even in reality it is just a simple thing that they blew out of proportion.

Article One Hundred And Twenty One (121)

It takes a better person… To laugh at life and silly issues. So many people are drama queens. To them, the world is full of evil and coming to an end and full of catastrophe. Humanity will get by one way or another. One kind of person looks down on the arena with amusement while others fight to the death. That fight is against the world and the things within it. Often it is just invincible enemies they are against. They become involved with some small element in the world and obsess over it. They labor to preach against it. Meanwhile the better person happily lives life. Compared to the other kind they are not a self-made victim.

Article One Hundred And Twenty Two (122)

The world hates us. Some call earth a beautiful and wonderful place. Is that true? It's not. It's totally not. Even in a lovely forest you find vicious animals, poisonous mushrooms, and deadly little insects. There are all sorts of weather phenomena that ruin and end lives. Tornados for example. Hurricanes and floods too. The power of lightning that could turn us into a crisp. There are earthquakes. In the sea there are all kinds of deadly things. From sting rays to sharks, and don't forget jelly fish. If we get cut we risk infection just from what is in the air. Viruses are always trying to end us. So for that reason I have to say, the world is a deadly place to live.

Article One Hundred And Twenty Three (123)

I don't teach evil things. I don't even teach bad things. I am against evil things. I am in fact a philanthropist. We don't need evil people in the world. Some of them harm innocent people in horrible ways. As a Luciferian I prefer a stronger and tougher brand of justice. These people who hurt others in evil ways should be given it and made an example out of. I am always angry to see and hear about it. I cannot imagine the pain it brings their loved ones when their young one is killed. The government should just have no tolerance for it. These people are not human. They are rabid animals. They are infected with sickness that is worse than a virus.

Article One Hundred And Twenty Four (124)

What the world has to offer. We don't tap into so much of it. Hopefully we are not at home all day when there is so much out there to enjoy. We can go bowling any day. That's my favorite sport, what's yours? We could go skating. We could go see a movie. We could go to a concert. We can do any number of things. We can do more than just shopping.

Article One Hundred And Twenty Five (125)

Forced to receive help. I have schizophrenia and it has happened a few times that I got so paranoid and delusional that I wound up in jail. I was homeless that way for a year. The medication makes me feel normal. Believe it or not I went that whole year without sleeping. I mean sleep at all, not even pre-rapid eye movement sleep. I never fell unconscious for a year. That's because of the kinds of thoughts that Schizophrenia gives me. Mostly repetition, thinking about the same thing endlessly and without rest. That made me unable to sleep, complicating things further. On the medication however, it is not so. I think and behave normally. That's why I believe that Schizophrenics should be compelled to take medication.

Article One Hundred And Twenty Seven (127)

Modern foolishness. There are actually people out there who eat most of their food in a restaurant and then demand a refund because "they didn't like it." There are tantrums being made over not-hot-enough french fries. There are Karens out there (a modern term) who would do anything and everything to have you arrested. It baffles me as to why. They want that power I suppose. They want to hurt others that way. They want to be a jury and executioner. Perhaps they hate the world and everyone in it, including themselves. If the least of rules are not followed, they are there to witness and punish you over it.

Then there are the kinds that make victims of themselves. They would turn the table on the law if they could. They never succeed at it but there are always new people coming around who'd do the same. They fake seizures, they claim racism, rights they don't have, and often misinterpret the law. They blow up in madness just as soon as the police officer comes to their door. Their stubborn pride lands them in jail. If they had just taken the ticket, or sometimes just the warning, and left it at that, they'd be free. They "make a mountain out of a molehill."

They make it seem like they have a mental illness. Anyone can spot a real one though. That usually comes from how bizarre they sound. They protest against anything they can. They don't even know the real facts behind the matter.

Article One Hundred And Twenty Eight (128)

Painting unconventionally. If the fumes aren't bad, you can use nail polish. I made a glass ouija board that way. I had a panel of glass for it. One time I used a dry erase board. After I had created the art on it with an erasable marker, I painted over it. Why not mix forms? You could have a mix between realism and the abstract in one painting or part impressionism. I like making images which can mean more than one thing at once, like blending into another thing yet the two are also separable. Sometimes you can find unconventional dyes, mustard for example. It could be coolaid. It kind of shows a different type of color instead of the whole thing being ordinary paint.

Article One Hundred And Twenty Nine (129)

Some neat scientific stuff. We might not be able to go to mars with our human bodies but maybe we can be there in an android one. That would mean the android itself coupled with VR and things like that. We could send androids, robots, and drones to build our base on Mars. We don't have to be there in human form to do so. We can also send androids into far space to make contact with aliens.

Someday we could put our friends and family into a movie using deep fake. We can pick our characters and they'd look like us, in that movie. One person could be Lestat and the other Armond. Whatever one you want to be. We could change song lyrics to make them more relatable. Just tell it what you like and what you are like. We could scan a book to make it into a movie, via AI. We could produce video games that way too. Our video games could be programmed differently using our voice. That way, along with the playing, the game is changed to what you want it to be.

There can be movies that let you guide its plot with just saying so. You could say things like "remove this character." "Make this character the star." "More of this character." "This character dies." "They take a trip to San Francisco instead of Dallas." "Something bad happens." And so on.

Then maybe we can have a virtual trip to the grocery store. VR can let you roam around and pick things out which are delivered afterward.

Article One Hundred And Thirty (130)

The gray side. Is seldom discussed. You don't find it in an occult book. You don't find it in a religious book (except my exploration into Christian Satanism.) You don't find it in movies or other things. There is next to none of it in existence. Not in Star Wars for example. I think it would have been a nice plot move to introduce a gray sided warrior. Just don't call it a "gray jedi" because gray sided is not light sided.

Nature is built around two's. That is empirical. Take a look at your body. Two hands, two thumbs, two arms, two legs, two feet, two nostrils, two lips, two ears, even two sides to a brain. You take one step and then another. The clock goes "tic-toc" not tic-tic. It takes two to make a third. There is the sun and the moon. There is day and there is night. Could it be that religion should be the same?

It is neither too much or too little of one thing. Grayness is about balance. That way you never become too involved. You are broader with grayness. You get to experience the best from both. It can help you grow. It broadens your existence. It broadens your mind. Moderation is known to solve so many ills. With moderation nothing becomes too bad. Just a little drinking of alcohol. Just a little gambling, for example.

Most are sided-minded however. They are in it for the side. It is a battle game for them. They want their own side to triumph. That is a normal component to religion and groups. I am not only talking about religion. I am talking about groups too. So when a person shows up saying they are on both sides then of course that is going to be offensive. I am on both of your sides, a person would say.

Gray magic is effect magic, such as weather change. Not necessarily bad, but not necessarily good. Gray symbols have a Satanic component and a Christian one. For example a double cross. Another example is the yin-yang. Gray names are generic ones. Gary or Adam for example. Gray music simply has a harsh side and a calm one. Gray movies have a villain who is also the good guy. A gray drink could be mixing tea with coffee. A gray taste is sweet and sour or chocolate: one is very bitter, the other sweet. It is having sugar in coffee. Although I prefer my coffee black. It is living from midnight to midday I guess you could say. The Church once considered that a musical organ had no place there. The details run deep. You could call a gray design for a vehicle as being rigid some but also smooth some.

Article One Hundred And Thirty One (131)

Other people's problems. We pick our battles and "live to fight another day." We should not get involved in other people's squabbles. We shouldn't cause commotions and expect it to go well. Be a viewer, not a participant. Saying the wrong things online can get you into trouble. I am surprised how many people just cannot hold their tongue, even on the internet. Don't arouse violence towards you. Genuinely fighting for rights genuinely lost is one thing but if it doesn't come to your front door (or you don't see it heading your way) then don't worry about it.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Two (132)

System breakers. When people break the system they might as well enter into your home and demolish it. They might as well gather violent anarchists and bring them right to your door. They may as well ruin the stores and the places you vacation. They even pose a danger to your loved ones. Here's an example: thieves ransacking businesses causing prices to go up and everything to be locked up. Some people made some mistake that pained them and due to a lawsuit they bankrupt things. The boy who cried wolf until it seems like even honest people are total liars.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Three (133)

Gift giving. Some kids grow up with nothing. That's a pity because it takes a happy childhood to grow up right. That and our parents are teaching us to give, by being the example. I have a theory that retro gamers are nice people simply because their parents got them video games. There's probably more to that idea. Gift giving teaches us about others as we look into their souls. We learn who they are and what they want in that way. Gift giving can be a way to pay back our parents. We can get them things along the same line as what they gave us. It can be a competition… who will give the best gifts. Gift giving can include taking your children on vacation or celebrating a birthday at a neat place.

Don't forespeak what you'll give. That only obligates you towards it and removes the surprise at the end. Who knows if you'll change your mind before that time. Give thought to what they need. If they are moving soon then you can get them moving bags. Try not to spoil the person. Be consistent. If you decide not to get someone a birthday present but you have been giving good ones it might make them feel bad. Sometimes a good thing to give is something they wanted but felt like it was a waste of money, personally.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Four (134)

Body odor is disgusting. Scientists defy common sense when they say that "due to pheromones" body odor is sexually appealing. No, we all smelled certain people we wanted away from, some of whom made us gag. Like "what was that? Get that away from me." If we have to be around them often then we either have to embarrass them into showering or putting up with it. When I am on a crowded bus and I smell someone near me I put my face mask on. "What is that pleasant smell, it is so attractive," I just cannot believe anyone would ever think that about body odor.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Five (135)

Jail is awful. There is a mentality going around sometimes that it is a pajama party with free meals. They think it is good, that it's "three meals a day without any work." The meals are awful though. At lunch you might get a bologna sandwich, bread, a little thing of mustard, and an orange. They might rotate. That every other day and the other days a peanut butter sandwich. At breakfast you eat a small amount of eggs or potatoes, a very small amount of milk, sometimes a small amount of cereal. The dinner is the best but it still leaves you hungry. People often eat orange peels as late afternoon snacks. The mustard too. You know something… I found a dookie in my dinner once. There is no telling how often it was spit into. Fights are bad in jails. After all, the people you are housed with are that kind of people. TV is whatever the guards put on. You only have TV and books for entertainment. When in court or being transported you are placed in a room for hours. You can't even get a good nap in those rooms. It is nothing but concrete with a toilet. You have to wear your ugly orange colored clothing all of the time. You crap right in front of others. Jail is a horrible place. I would take homelessness or mental hospitals over jail, any day.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Six (136)

Sit on a throne. Enjoy your life. Work hard on your future. Have pride in that work. Have pride in your accomplishments. Have a comfortable chair. Ruminate there on all good things. Soul search with pride and optimism. Always have a nice drink beside you. Get the best food you can afford. Start a nice collection of treasures. Create nice things and have fun making them. Swing on a tall swing. Wear nice clean and new clothes. Proudly go about in them. Expand your tastes and the love of the world. Don't give way to anger, sadness, guilt, or such things. Choose happiness and wellness. Have solid goals that you are good at. Make things happen. Be healthy. Laugh sometimes. Have beautiful things surrounding you. Then you will be a King (or Queen) of the Earth.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Seven (137)

When in Rome do as the Romans do. I was just 18 when a devil taught me to blend in. If you are going to be a successful Luciferian then you must blend in. Most people would not understand you and your beliefs. No, they don't even want to hear you explain it to them. So blend in. It isn't that difficult. You can be totally against something on the inside but show no angst for it on the outside. You can understand the things I teach in full but if you were to present it to another they wouldn't so quickly grasp it. It would come across as odd. Too much of it and you'll sound weird to them. It isn't always the best idea to stand out. People who blend in get by more smoothly.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Eight (138)

How does Satan guide his children? I would say that it is much different than how God guides His. The Devil would spoil you. The Devil would have you be childish. Walking with your arms and legs slung around. Dance with the song you hear. Enjoy sweets. The Devil would make you be proud. He wants things being done. He would give you a purpose, one that you are good at. He would have you be strong, not weak, a goat, not a sheep. He would have you enjoy life. He would have you interested in the world. If you deserve success then he will give it to you. He will treat you on… merit, worth, value, quality, excellence, virtue, and asset. He would have you embracing your sin and enjoying it.

Article One Hundred And Thirty Nine (139)

Some of the childish things that I like. Action figures of the 80s and early 90s. He-Man, TMNT, large playsets, All video game things, green marbles, glow in the dark things, trapper keepers, little green army men, miniature figures, glow sticks, halloween things, stickers, stencils, ink stamps, colored pens, markers, kid's keyboards, board game pieces, twelve or twenty-four sided dice, LCD games, mechanical games, pogs, tall swings, vending machine toys, comics, trading cards (for 80s and 90s movies, marvel, cartoon based, ect.), bubbles, little vehicles, pokemon cards, ribbons, mickey mouse watches, troll dolls, mad balls, slime, and toy swords.

Article One Hundred And Forty (140)

Fun with magic. I personally believe in it and for valid reasons. Even if you don't it can still be fun. We can believe in movies. We can be totally misled by them. We think the characters are real without questioning it. So likewise we can believe in magic. Wiccans look like they are having a lot of fun. They pray to candles and keep crystals in their pockets. Even rocks are sacred to them! Building an altar can be fun. You select just the right dagger, symbols, and I would just say don't do what others are doing. Make your altar your own way. I once had one for Lilith with the Book of Nod and a rubber bat. So pick the entities most special to you and celebrate them via an altar. Then there is astrology, there is herbalism, and there is your occult diary/ grimoire. Ouija boards, tarot cards, and crystal balls too.

Article One Hundred And Forty One (141)

Improving your home. Take it away from the dull and ordinary. Transform it into a special place. You can make it from the most minute (a power socket cover) to the larger things like beds. I have said before that I like my bed higher up. I just enjoy that. Some like a more coffin type of bed. There is no reason why you can't have a tent in your room to sleep in. If for no other reason than it feels special, that's more than good enough. You might try glow in the dark paint. You could have a projector that shows the stars and moon on your ceiling at night. You might tack up glow in the dark stars. Be careful with those though. They have become cheap junk. I have also mentioned "tarot card wallpaper." You can do the same with any kind of card you like. If you are into sports then sports cards. If you are into super heroes then those.

You can make cooking easier on yourself with the right kitchen tools. I say out with the old and in with the new. A better microwave at least. A TV just a little bigger than before, and the like. Glass beads for a doorway might be a thing for you. You might prefer a pastel color or a solid one. Maybe the room you sleep in is painted black.

A Luciferian Temple. Let it be a place where minds meet. A place where brilliant ideas are formed. Let it look stunning. Let it shine and glimmer. Let it show the brilliant side of the Luciferian.

Article One Hundred And Forty Three (143)

Jesus is the Son of God. My pride does not at all get in the way of saying so. Only he could have done what he did. That is, create a church in every city, many, many, with some of them magnificent looking. He caught on like a wildfire. Despite so much opposition he won in the end. He shook the world like nothing before it or after it. Only the Son of God could have done that.

Article One Hundred And Forty Four (144)

In a moment the whole world can change. "What a difference a day can make." Maybe all we need is tougher laws to deter crime. Maybe crime has gone too far just because we need things tougher on criminals. A virus could appear out of nowhere. A very strong technological advancement can change everything, such as fusion energy. A nation can suddenly be at war. For a number of reasons, things can rapidly change.

Article One Hundred And Forty Five (145)

Creativity and being creative. There is no wrong way of doing it. You might like knitting or you might like painting. Being creative means you bring things into the world. They can be from lesser to greater value. You also occupy some of your time better that way, as compared to watching TV. Taking time out for creativity can be a good addition to your daily routine.

Article One Hundred And Forty Six (146)

Being different. Let it come with self confidence. If you are not sure of yourself then how can you expect others to be? Especially when you stand out. So have the right aura about you. That is one that is not full of oneself. Be an attractive kind of different. There are different kinds of "different." There are strange differences, weird differences, neat differences, cool differences, and so on. Be the good kind of different.

Article One Hundred And Forty Seven (147)

Live to fight another day. There are those who would love to fight you to make their own day special. There are those that are just asking for a fight. Let them find that one they should have not ticked off. They will eventually. They will anger someone bigger than them. If they are constantly going around with that attitude then they won't get far.

Article One Hundred And Forty Eight (148)

Manner enforcement. There are people out there who would lash out at you for not having manners. We are always having to excuse ourselves and such things. If we don't we may anger someone. If we don't hold the door open for gender then there might be hell to pay. At least we don't shake hands nearly as much. I might have shaken one hand in the last 3 years. That was because of a new virus going around. Maybe around other Luciferians we shouldn't be so strict. I had a friend once who would say "give me the salt," instead of "will you pass me the salt?" I can respect him for that.

Article One Hundred And Forty Nine (149)

Invalidate the popular. A Luciferian avoids popular things just for the reason that it is bad for individualism. Luciferian really does spell out individualism. You could accurately enough say that Luciferianism is individualism. Of course it is more than that but that's a strong sticking point. So avoid the popular section of the library. Go for things that most don't even consider, they are so lacking. You might find the "hidden gems" as they say. Those things that are good that are underlooked. Movies often come out in theaters which go nowhere only to later become "cult classics" but there the Luciferian is enjoying it in the theater.

Article One Hundred And Fifty (150)

Stubborn pride is not pride. It should even be called a sin for a Luciferian… as it is about the opposite of real pride. Arrest videos are a guilty pleasure of mine. At least I don't mean shootouts, though. I mean the kind when the person is belligerent. So much that they turn a traffic ticket into arrest. They victimize themselves or whatever regamore. They just cannot be wrong. They can't just walk out of a bad situation. They cannot suck up their pride and take it elsewhere.

Article One Hundred And Fifty One (151)

What freedom should be. If we aren't hurting or potentially hurting then we should mostly be free. Our rights in the Declaration of Independence provides us rights that any would fight for. Unfortunately there are poor souls out there which live under a dictatorship. Saying the wrong thing can get them killed. Expressing themselves in a certain way, too. We should always be philanthropic in our approach. We should all fight for freedom and that includes freedom for others. Let the oppressors be known as disgusting and out of place in the world.

Article One Hundred And Fifty Two (152)

Rights are blemished because of stupid people. They are those who use their rights to do bad things. They make themselves out to be victims. They make it hard to find the truly disabled. In a sense they blaspheme true victims by playing a game with it. This happened to this person and that is happening to them, when it isn't. It's the easiest to understand as "the boy who cried wolf." The boy once had a joke. He would yell towards others that there was a wolf. Then one day there really was one.

Article One Hundred And Fifty Three (153)

Christian standards. The standard that Jesus taught is seldom followed by Christians. I've heard some say that turning the other cheek is nonsense. I even heard one person say "Jesus didn't say that." They weren't well read enough. He taught to love your enemies. He taught that if someone takes something from you, give them the rest. He taught things that went against human nature. They judge others more and more intricately than any other group. They are taught "don't judge others." They have love and condemnation at the same time.

I once had a book in school (a borrowed one) about Navajo Witchcraft. My principal caught wind of it. I guess I did something terrible because it was reported to him right away. So he brought me into his office. He held the paddle in front of my face, told me to stop smirking, and if I didn't pray to God for forgiveness he was going to swat me.

Article One Hundred And Fifty Four (154)

What I do like about Christians. When Christians get it right then they are some of the best people on earth. They help others. They feed the poor and invest in their communities. A good Church helps those who are suffering. A good Christian is gentle. Unlike other religious beings they blend into the world quite well. You don't hear them talking strange nonsense. They feel like normal people and not some strange person saying strange cult things. They are level headed. They are mature. They have morals and self control.

Article One Hundred And Fifty Five (155)

I don't believe in lying. I don't believe in lying, personally. Some people lie about their achievements or exaggerate them. I don't want to plant a false idea about myself in someone else's head. I want to be known in truth. Truth saved me from punishment or condemnation before. It smoothed out a rocky thing you could say. I told the truth and they respected me for it. It makes a person trustworthy. I guess the only time I would lie is if someone is trying to use the truth against me. Those interrogation people would trick you. They'd lie to you with things like "we know you didn't really mean it," or, "maybe it was an accident," and, "we understand that it was a moment of passion." Fortunately though I'm not the kind of person that would be subject to interrogation.

Article One Hundred And Fifty Six (156)

Gay people. I have never been against gay people. I have never been against the LGBTQ plus people (Lesbian, Gay, Bi, Trans, Queer people.) I have had perfectly good friendships with some of them. It has been said before that they are better to have around than gangsters. They have their own agendas which I am not a part of. I don't get involved with politics. Whatever the case though I don't see anything bad or wrong with them. I can't personally see how a man can like another man, but it's none of my business.

Article One Hundred And Fifty Seven (157)

The bright side of crime. It's a twisted kind of bright side thing, but if they are stealing from the stores, at least they aren't stealing from your home. If they are looting businesses then at least it isn't your home. If they are high somewhere then at least they are too high to hurt you. If they are drunk then at least they can't fight well.

Article One Hundred And Fifty Eight (158)

At least... If they are protesting at least it isn't against your existence. If they complain, maybe they are jealous. If they criticize, the same thing. If they want to fight, they feel threatened, afraid, or insecure. If they are playing video games at least they aren't out causing trouble. If they are lazy and make crap things at least there's less competition. At least when you are single you have all of your time and money for yourself.

Higher beings. The higher intelligent kind knows, learns, and remembers things far better than we do. They are far more attuned to picking up on subtle things. They can understand subtle gestures that we would barely register as movement. They more fully understand things off-hand. They are better at predicting things. They easily learn new languages. In fact they have bigger and more meaningful words. They don't travel around in space ships. Their tech goes beyond metal machinery flying around. It is not like they are out at sea in a ship, only in space.

They more fully enjoy music and movies. It is deeper to them. They find solutions, remedies, and answers quicker than us. They calculate things better. One symbol means many words. Their talk and books are significantly more robust, yet with less. They can cue in on subtle variations. When they eat they can sense differences in the taste which we cannot.

Some ideas for magical things… How about a Satanic or Luciferian tarot deck? Has that even been done yet? There could be an electronic grimoire and magic book. There could be an electronic dictionary that puts anything into an occult perspective. There can be an occult calculator that inputs numerology, element, moon phase, into a calculation. In a D&D style there can be the "Magic: The Encyclopedia" game. That is played with books A-Z. Packs of tarot cards to buy containing different styles of decks. Try to find all of the same deck. A "witchcraft diet" book. Instead of a mood ring a mood necklace.

Don't be shamed. Fighting against smoking has been a long and hard fight. It started out with just informing smokers of the harm it causes. That found its way into the package labeling. They were not successful enough at stopping it. They ran the course of other methods which did not work well enough. The one that they found worked best of all was to make it look disgusting. I remember an early commercial of this. A person was packing their cigarettes. That is when you tap the pack to pack the tobacco. The commercial showed him as a monkey while doing it. They outright said things like it is filthy, disgusting, and intolerable. Everyone has at least one vice. Who is anyone to say that they can't? Just so blatantly and openly have your "shame" on display. Maybe they'll stop bossing people around. Let them know you are proud of your sin or at least that it's none of their business.

Isolation creates uniqueness. I am not talking so much about not being around others. I am talking about the sort of isolation where you only capture rarer things… things apart from the common. Let your thoughts go into places that are not commonly gone into. Don't have the mind that the whole world shares. Instead, have your thoughts be unique to you. Isolation creates uniqueness. The term "selective isolation" is used here. Let what knowledge moves you be old and forgotten or at least not as well known. Most are only tuned into the new.

Look deep in the world. Some even get lost in it. Some go from house to house and place to place. They have no true home except the world itself. They are always doing new and interesting things. They are always meeting new people and seeing new places. They sometimes travel to different cities. Some of these are rich, some are homeless, with more or less resources. Then there are those called gypsies which create camps from place to place. They charge money for the show they put on. They have things like belly dancing and cheap food to eat. There is a lot out there to see. So many just scratch the surface. You don't have to be a vagabond or wanderer. The world has a lot to offer.

Five, the grace number. For me, 5 is a grace number. I allow myself to be either five minutes late or early. Instead of doing something at the top of the hour, I base it on five minutes before. That is unless time is strictly set, that it requires to be topped off. When I cook things in the microwave I open the door when there is five seconds left to go, instead of it being fully finished. When I am going to go down to check the mail, it is more likely at 4:55 than it is at 5:00.

People who talk about the Devil all the time. They have a fetish for him and that includes Christians. The preacher that talks about Satan more than anything else admires him, whether or not they know it. They have this side to them which might want to be on his side. After all they've repressed any such feelings, deeply so. Maybe they are at a breaking point. Devil this and devil that.

Good ideas for a coven. I think letting it all be fun is the most important thing. You could venture into interesting areas to do what you do. Those places could be isolated and secretive. You can take walks together in the meantime. Magic supplies are easy to come by. So much more than a teenage me who had to wait until halloween just to get a black candle. You should share ideas. You should each determine just what you want to do. You should each have that choice sometimes. You could go wiccan or you could go "order of" or grotto or whatever else. There's no real reason why you can't switch among them. Share the knowledge you gain. Especially share the things you know work. One learns something then teaches the other. You could be a close pack of friends where friends are hard to come by. You each carve out your own identity within the coven. That can be as basic as "earth, wind, fire, and air," or more detailed. Your thing might even end up as a profitable church! If not some temple or "order of" or something else. Church is a word that belongs to Christians, however.

Having interests other than religion. Having only a religion as your interest creates a cult out of things. That happens too often. Sometimes we have to take a step away. That's no problem when we have separate interests. For me it is gaming. I also enjoy retro gaming videos online. Then there is my other body of work: my books under Adam Jeremy Capps. Those are mostly about new video game ideas. For you it can be whatever you want it to be. I would say put some time into whatever it is, every day.

Article One Hundred And Sixty Eight (168)

The world should belong to the peacekeepers. It should belong to "the contributors of good things." It should be taken away from the bad. The heinous should certainly be locked away someplace. This isn't so much for us individually. It is for all of us who would only do good in the world. Because there are those who really only do ever add good to the world. They are even the salt of the earth. But these precious sacred people are harmed, maimed, even destroyed wantonly by evil people. They should be halted at their tracks and dispelled from society. Anytime that we leave a weed behind we risk it growing further.

Article One Hundred And Sixty Nine (169)

Philanthropy makes a country great. A country that has power and uses it for good is the greatest nation. On the other hand, if they use that power to harm, then they are the worst of nations. We must always be on guard that military conquest might end bad for us. As long as we are doing good however, we remain in the right. Who can complain about a nation that really does want what is best for the world? Giving gifts that run free. Making the best world that can be.

What is time? Some say that there is no such thing. Some are baffled to describe it. There is an easy explanation. Time is just the processing of something. Like the precise measurement provided from a movement of the clock. That is, the clock processing around and around. The process of the earth moving around the sun. The process of being on the side of the sun then the side of the moon. The process of a body getting older. The processing of thought. For a computer, the processing is much faster. It is, however, still a process.

Why do people collect things? Think back to when you were a kid. The most popular kids had all of the video games. Of course everyone wanted to go to their house and they knew they'd have to be on their good side to stay. Women and men try to impress each other with their belongings. I recall being a teenager when that was so. So fast forward to today and here you are an adult with a game collection. You are happy to show anyone your collection, whether online or in person. In essence you are wanting to be the big kid on the block for the first time. You are also showing any potential partner that you have good things. Of course having a baby, that baby is going to need a person with money.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Two (172)

Strength makes you happy. It keeps you composed. A weaker mind stares at the clock during work. Time beats them up you could say. The weaker minded are inpatient. Things are never quick enough. They are easily frustrated. They even show it sometimes, such as in a fast food place. The strong minded can stop to smell the roses– they benefit from time passing along. They are willing to wait. "All good things come to those who wait." They are not easily offended. They can sum a person up for who they are. If they know there is something psychologically off in a person, they know not to be offended by them. They themselves have a stable mind. People hurling cuss words at them are not going to bother them. They have a good, peaceful, and happy place on the earth. They are solid like a rock. Not shaky like Jenga.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Three (173)

Spiritually finding your own place. Be guided by your heart, always. So many people's spirits are interconnected. They are ruled by whatever the base was. A person may have even calculated where and how they want others to go. Be your own person. That is important in Luciferianism. Hell will follow you around. The metaphysical will follow after you. You are a hidden gem to them. You do not have to altogether avoid the commonality of people. That would be too strict a suggestion. You do not want 100 percent abandonment. I would say 65 percent is fine. Just don't let others be the example of what is good or bad without first seeing for yourself. Do so in an honest fashion. Find your own truth in life. Go where others seldom go.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Four (174)

God created the universe. The whole world believes in God, pretty much. The major religions of the world acknowledge Him. That was something that began in the little place of the middle east. Here we are on the other side of the world believing in the same God. So many Churches, synagogues, and mosques in this world. It is not a nonsense kind of belief. They don't have the silly mythology (which is religion essentially) as the Egyptians or Greeks had. It has been said that the chances of this universe existing happen-stance as it is, is astronomically low. They would argue that there are multi-verses to explain that instead of believing that God created everything. As for physics, they are God's toys. God can have them or not, He can manipulate them, He can use them at His will.

Look, the sun is the same size as the moon (perspective wise.) The clouds paint a beautiful picture in our skies. The earth is perfectly balanced. It has been around for untold sums of time. As for evolution, God created things in a way which could transform into something superior. What's wrong with that, after all. That is, if evolution is a true theory to begin with. I can say: we didn't come from apes. They say this just because we are similar to them. To say me or you look like them however, that's stretching it. They say that birds came from dinosaurs. Perhaps that was one last good send off before He removed them from the earth. Their legacy, you could say.

Jesus loved nature and so did his Father. Jesus was often talking about nature. When I look at the beauty of the Earth I imagine it being created lovingly by God. I don't see a world that just happened to have come about. When I think of my own existence I know I have a reason and a purpose for it.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Five (175)

Superior psychology. We live in a society that creates weak people. We are creating self centered brats. We give too many excuses to such people. We are too focused on group minded things. We should change that direction, going for individualism instead. I became quite a solidary person because of group homes, mental hospitals, boarding care, and jail. Now I am never a lonely guy. To have to share a room with someone, sometimes ten other people, made me detest it. There is nothing worse than sharing a room with another. These groups they'd make me do early every morning. The first thing I had to do every morning was to "share my thoughts" with everyone. I couldn't even go to the kitchen or the living room without twenty people there. Suffice it to say I am not alone and wish to stay that way. I'm glad there are people out there, don't get me wrong, I just don't want them close by.

If I ever had a kid I would homeschool him or her. I wouldn't want them to be around these kinds of kids that exist today. That is more than enough proof that society is failing us as far as our methods go. "The proof is in the pudding." We need to change society with new and superior psychology. That would mean appreciation of strength, competitiveness, open mindedness, individuality, self focused, non group mindedness, goals, ambition, responsibility, and the respect for authority.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Six (176)

Respect for authority. We might not like the fact but we have to follow the rules. Some places have harder rules than others. We must follow them anyway. I have been watching arrest videos of foolish people. The belligerent kind that can't ever be wrong… stubborn people to add to that. They would turn every trick in the book to get their way. They will run in circles with what they have to say. They directly need to rule the roost (to be in charge, hold the most authority, or dominate.) No matter their efforts though they end up in jail.

Be careful of claiming rights you don't actually have. For example a police officer that can compel you to leave your vehicle. I have seen the situation. After being stubborn and refusing to, they end up arrested, all the while thinking they had the right to stay in. The Miranda rights for another example. They only have to read you your rights if they are going to ask you self incriminating questions. They can put you into their vehicle and arrest you without saying a word. So sometimes we think things are the way they are not.

Then there are the intricately fooled. The "sov citizen." They follow all sorts of nonsense. They think they have a number of rights they don't. Such as not having to have a driver's license. They think that the only people who need them are commercial transporters. They differentiate driving from traveling. Of course we know that the two are the same thing. To them traveling anywhere is a right. Such as the police having no right to pull them over unless they harmed someone. That's not all of it either. It runs deep.

When stopped by authority just do what they say. Don't start pulling out cuss words and slander. Sure you have the right to free speech but that is abuse of a right and the expectation that the police will take it well is not true. They are people, too, and sometimes have the choice to either warn you, ticket you, or arrest you.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Seven (177)

Becoming a mother to an adult. Whenever you give things to someone you turn them into your baby. It is in human nature and mammal nature to cling to your mother. To cry out when you are in need. When you become an adult a part of that is still with you. It reappears whenever someone starts giving them things. They even rant and rage about late food stamps or not enough food stamps. They should just be grateful and leave it at that.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Eight (178)

Zombie thinkers. They want your brains. They want your thoughts. They want their minds to be as one. They need to be one big huge brain roaming about disrupting things. They'll lash out at you out there while you are strolling the streets. You'll find them slumped over due to drug intakes. Just stationary and bent over reveling in the feeling. You'll find them with picket signs for a matter that won't even last a few weeks. They'll just exchange it with something more recent. They'll soon enough forget about what happened. They bear the group's opinion. They can never be alone. They are quite empty headed when alone. They keep with them group mindedness even when they are alone.

The more a person thinks for themself the more Luciferian they are. They have a soul and spirit. They have a unique essence. They have a mind which operates independently.

Article One Hundred And Seventy Nine (179)

Find maturity. A person either grows up or grows down. If they grow down they'll end up in trouble, even jail, even prison. They'll never have any real friends. Their friends will just be people who fear them. They don't want to be around people like that. I was the worst teenager you could know. It is a miracle I didn't hurt anyone. I was always slewing slander at my parents. I acted like a baby in the worst way. My parents understood though. I think it was because of different genes. My siblings acted just fine. They were step and half siblings other than one of them, who was my sister. Genes do make a difference with how you act at that age. How you think too and things like that. I grew better though. I became a calm, even headed person without any anger at all in me. I don't think we could ever be 100 percent without anger. Anytime I feel it though it is quite brief. I feel bad that I didn't get along with my siblings. We've all grown into mature adults though. Youth has its excuses. Hopefully a young person doesn't ruin their whole life though with particularly bad choices. If you get by not harming others then you have done fine, or at least good enough. As for the rest, you can make up for it when you get older.

Crafts with junk. There are the more common ones: using beads, using popsicle sticks, or whatever. I always thought building your own circuit board with unconventional things is a cool idea. You know, instead of the normal components such as resistors and transistors. Like placing wire around a CD which turns switches on and off. Not for any real or useful tech purpose, but for fun. Then again you might stumble into a great new idea that way.

Just to throw out some random items that can be used with crafts: fishing line, beads, straws, CDs, tape, wire, leather, shoe laces, thread, paint, glow in the dark paint, card board, glue, glue gun, can, bottle, knife, wood, coaster with images, cards, marbles of various colors, epoxy, clay, velcro, miniature figures, board game pieces, coins, laminator, dice, rings, and feathers. Rings, feathers, and fishing strings can make a dream catcher. Dice and glue can make a kind of person looking statue. Maybe that has marble eyes. Beads and leather strings can make cross necklaces. Straw and thread can make a curtain. Maybe you have one row of straw and one of beads, back and forth. Coasters which have neat images can be strung up as well.

Hearing Spirits. I can attest that magic works. For so long I performed and used magic to be able to hear spirits. I wanted the door opened between me and them. Over time I forgot about those things. Then came a time when I could hear them talking to me. They didn't have profound things to say. One time I said to myself "men are perverts," and a spirit said "that's why women like you." One time I was holding a bible looking for the passage about Lucifer when a spirit said to me "Issaiah 14." One time I was praying to God and a spirit said "there is no God, silly!" One time I was walking to nowhere. Just completely so, while homeless, for days, and a spirit said "some are saying he isn't human. He's a beast." Then sometimes I would sense and hear a spirit dwelling in one place or another. Usually isolated places. I was also hearing the thoughts of others.

Article One Hundred And Eighty One (181)

Evil spirit in me. One time a voice said to me "that's evil!" I was walking in a completely childish way. I was swinging the legs and arms, turning about, and next to dancing while I was walking. I would make up new accents. I came up with the chant:

Do the shake, do the shake, do the wake, do the hippy-shake.
Daylight come, mon, me wanna go home
Iza day iza day iza day-yay-yul.

One group says "amen," another "so it is done." I have "Hales-Nema, So Noted In Memory."

One time I walked right out into a crowd and loudly sang the song "when you wish upon a star." If a business was playing music then I'd break out into a dance there. I had been in the most interesting and sometimes most lonely places of San Francisco while I was homeless. Every place carried some amount of magic. Whenever I was able to buy some candy I performed my taste magic with it. That's something I talked about before. I would see things in the clouds. I had visions of five far away planets. Those were talked about in my "five planets" book series (Adam Jeremy Capps.)

I really felt like I ventured into hell to "collect the runes," which is my way of saying "bringing magic back from hell." It led to the body of work that I do to this day. The further you go back the more crazy I sound. I fixed that. With a sane mind I made sense of it.

Article One Hundred And Eighty Two (182)

Human kind must learn to live with their sins. We are at the cusp of a new era. Humankind has had a lot thrown at them. For centuries Christian morality ruled the roost. It guided and shaped people for a considerable amount of time. Now we are left without it. Where should we go with only our real nature to guide us? That nature that makes us sinful? We must develop a new mentality, a new philosophy, and a new way, one which keeps us both mature and responsible. Humanity has run amuck. The dust hasn't yet settled. Our guiding principles must start out as: maturity, responsibility, as much philanthropy as possible, strength, and purpose. That purpose apart from sin. People have been living according to sin, too much. We must have a purpose which isn't about sin and not about sheer indulgence.

Article One Hundred And Eighty Three (183)

Actions speak louder than words. Actions have more to say. I learned not to tell others my goals. If you have these goals that are meant to impress others (say you are starting college) and you say it to another, then the surprise is gone. You've impressed them. There is no "future impressing" because of it. If you forespeak you lose the surprise and also just obligate yourself. If you never said yes, you'd never have to say no. When you say no, you are disappointed. If the thing was never said to another then you could just change your mind and no one would have ever known. If you come straight out saying "I got a new degree" then that is surprising indeed instead of something anticipated.

Article One Hundred And Eighty Four (184)

Unreal problems. People make problems that aren't really problems. They need something to be better than. They need the fight in their lives. They look into other people's problems and make them their own. This is certainly confounded due to the internet. Now everyone everywhere can hear far more about the world than before. All sorts of problems and issues are multiplied. If it happens, we hear about it. In the past we only heard about things from news channels. They can't possibly cover everything. Now everyone has their own camera. Whether a phone or on their door, always in their pocket. Could it be that many of these things are just the same old? When we put video to it it is more potent.

People can take a shallow problem and make it deep. They often do. You might even say it is in human nature too. I say that if it doesn't come to your front door, or if it is not creeping towards your front door, then don't expend the energy and time to fight it. People will rant and rage about one thing for a short while before they turn to a new one.

Article One Hundred And Eighty Five (185)

Having all the freedom you need. Let people have all the freedom they need. So long as they aren't hurting others let them go their own way in life. Let them do whatever they want. It doesn't encompass everything but it does most things. For example a person shouldn't be allowed to spit in a fountain. While that probably isn't going to hurt anyone, it is just not permissible. These are common sense things. Trashing a person's things doesn't hurt them other than making them angry. However, that shouldn't be allowed either.

Article One Hundred And Eighty Six (186)

Things I wish I knew in school. I should have focused more on school than on my friends. I don't even know those people anymore. I am no longer friends with any of them. I should have focused on just one friend instead of a group of them. Things are watered down inside a group. I watched too many gangster things. I thought all the while it fit in with the school I attended. It didn't. In other words I thought that being a gangster was cool but it wasn't. It was irreverent to the kids there. I went to a small town school. No one was even "sagging." Meaning letting their pants hang down low. Further back in elementary school I made friends with the worst person possible. Then again it shaped my life. Two of my friends were talking about the occult. One said his aunt placed a curse on the cafeteria lady. I don't remember why. So he continues by saying that he'd never use black magic. Then my other friend said he would. As a kid this was marvelous to me. Magic works? They said too that the local library had occult books. I started borrowing and studying them. It never worked. By the age of 13 I was convinced that in order for the magic to work it must be aligned with Satan. Slayer and other metal music soon followed. I was a Devil worshiping Satanist at an early age.

I wasn't bullied. I fought back for myself. That's the only sure way of not being bullied. In one grade school I was popular. I had more than a few girlfriends and friends. In another school I was perhaps in the middle of popularity. In the others I was disdained for being who I was. I was respected, but someone that no one wanted to be around. Maybe I should have been more subtle.

Article One Hundred And Eighty Seven (187)

Don't let others make you feel guilty. Address the problem and hear it out but don't let them plant guilty feelings in you. Especially if it is a long gone thing. They are just trying to mold and manipulate you. At the same time, don't unearth past problems yourself. Be agreed that the past is the past. Perhaps they are not trying to make you feel guilty, however. Maybe they are just bragging about their own strength. You know, the difficult things they went through, and how they changed things for the better. I do that sometimes. I once told someone that Christians forgive. I was Christian at the time. That person used it against me. That mocked the faith so I discontinued forgiving them. There is the matter of whether you should forgive them or not. There is good reason to outright dismiss them from your life, sometimes. If they violated your relationship with them, then part ways. We are not in the forgiving business to begin with.

Article One Hundred And Eighty Eight (188)

Hold onto whatever delights you. Let go of anything that has soured. Sometimes the juice of a thing is just gone. I have a basic example: I once liked a kind of video but no longer do. I continue thinking I would, but simply cannot. I once liked a music video. I wonder where my enjoyment of it went. I should just let it go and find something I am going to enjoy. I should "slide into" a new thing. I will know it when I come across it. I will believe it when I see it. I will trust that that is where my heart went. You don't even have to have a reason for liking something. I knew a guy that would watch videos about RVs all the time.

Consider the gray side. Even if it is only because it is not what's being done, nor ever has been. How few and far between are gray sided things. You'll always be able to fit in. You can turn on the light side when you need to. You can turn on the dark one when around them. Balance and moderation will guide you. With your hands, bring the two together. Bring them together in whatever fashion. Symbol-wise, music-wise, book-wise, magic-wise, religious-wise, and the more obscure: language-wise, or food-wise. You name it, it can be brought into the gray side. Drinks for example. The most popular two: tea and coffee. Mix those together and you have a gray sided drink. Language wise: combine the softest accent with the toughest.
